Annex to letter dated 8 November 2000 from the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the President of the General Assembly

Statement of the delegation of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in exercise of the right of reply to the remarks made by the President of Argentina in the general debate on 7 September 2000

The British Government is pleased at the continued strengthening of our bilateral relations with Argentina, including this year through meetings between Prime Minister Blair and President De la Rúa and between our Foreign Ministers.

The Joint Statement signed between our two countries in July 1999 demonstrates clearly that the United Kingdom and Argentina can manage our differences on sovereignty while making practical arrangements on matters of common interest in the South Atlantic.

However, we wish to recall that there is nothing in the agreement that compromises the position of the United Kingdom in relation to its sovereignty over the Falkland Islands: we have no doubt about Britain's sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and the other British overseas territories in the South Atlantic.

We have a duty to respect and defend the right to self-determination of the people of the Falkland Islands. The elected representatives of the Islanders once again expressed their views clearly when they visited the United Nations for this year's debate in the Committee of 24 on 11 July. They asked the Committee to recognize that they, like any other democratic people, were entitled to exercise the right to self-determination. They reiterated that the people of the Falkland Islands wanted to remain British and did not want to be part of Argentina.

The British Government remains committed to the Joint Statement and despite our differences with Argentina on the subject of sovereignty we are confident that we will build on this agreement and that our relations will continue to flourish in the spirit of reconciliation, cooperation and mutual interest.
