Sixty-second session

Agenda item 140

Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations

Comprehensive report of conduct and discipline including full justification of all posts

Report of the Secretary-General*

Summary

The present report is submitted in response to the request by the General Assembly to the Secretary-General, in its resolution 61/276, section XVI, paragraph 6, for “a comprehensive report on the issue of conduct and discipline, including full justification of all posts, with staffing levels, functions and their impact on conduct and discipline”. In its report, which was subsequently endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 59/300, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations had delineated a comprehensive strategy to address issues of conduct and discipline in peacekeeping missions, particularly sexual exploitation and abuse, and mandated a range of measures and activities for implementation of the strategy. The present report identifies personnel functions that arose from the Comprehensive Strategy, reviews their performance by Conduct and Discipline Units in progressive implementation of the strategy, and describes the goals reached so far towards the objective of reducing and eliminating various forms of serious misconduct in peacekeeping missions, particularly sexual exploitation and abuse. Finally, on the basis of functions thus identified, proposals are made on post resources required for the ongoing implementation of the Comprehensive Strategy, and its continued operation in peacekeeping missions and at Headquarters.

* The document was delayed owing to additional technical and substantive consultations.

I. Introduction

1. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations at its resumed session in 2005 adopted the framework for a comprehensive strategy to address sexual exploitation and abuse and other forms of serious misconduct in peacekeeping missions, which is set out in its landmark report on the subject.¹ The strategy thus mandated sought to address and eliminate all forms of misconduct in peacekeeping missions, particularly sexual exploitation and abuse, by taking a broad spectrum of measures aimed at: enforcement action in cases where misconduct was reported to have occurred; provision of assistance to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse; and prevention of misconduct. In order to enable and facilitate efficient and effective action in relation to each of the three elements of the strategy, Member States have continued to show commitment to implementing “systemic changes”, relating to the fundamental paradigm that governs such action.

2. As described in the Secretary-General’s comprehensive report on sexual exploitation and abuse (A/60/862), the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and in peacekeeping missions² have since their establishment in 2005 been the focal point in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the Department of Field Support and the missions for progressive implementation of the Comprehensive Strategy to address sexual exploitation and abuse.

3. The following paragraphs review the nature of the functions assigned to Conduct and Discipline Units, the extent to which the performance by Conduct and Discipline Units of these functions so far has assisted in the implementation of the mandated strategy, and elements of the strategy, implementation of which is currently under way. In addition, a set of recurrent, routine operational functions resulting from the Comprehensive Strategy is identified. The successful performance of these functions is dependent on the adequate provision of personnel capacity. The scope of the report also covers the five special political missions where there is a Conduct and Discipline Unit presence.³

II. United Nations standards of conduct

A. Sexual exploitation and abuse

4. In the broad context, the primary sources of United Nations standards of conduct are the Charter of the United Nations, and the Regulations and Rules enacted by the Organization, e.g., Staff Regulations and Staff Rules. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 52/252, the Secretary-General promulgated his Bulletin ST/SGB/2002/13, thereby consolidating the provisions of primary sources on the “Status, basic rights and duties of United Nations staff members”. From time to time, these standards of conduct are further elaborated by means of administrative issuances, for example, the standards of conduct relating to sexual exploitation and abuse were defined by means of the Secretary-General’s Bulletin ST/SGB/2003/13 on “Special measures for protection from sexual exploitation and sexual abuse” (“the Bulletin”), which form part of the continuum of standards of conduct that the Organization has laid down for observance by its personnel. Although Conduct and Discipline Units were established in the immediate context of the problem of sexual exploitation and abuse, their role was to address all forms of serious misconduct in peacekeeping missions.

² In the present report, “Conduct and Discipline Units” refers both to the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and Conduct and Discipline Units in missions, while references exclusively to the latter are made as “mission Conduct and Discipline Units”.

5. Insofar as the Bulletin is concerned, the functions performed by Conduct and Discipline Units have had two main aspects: first, systemic — relating to applicability of the standards to various categories of peacekeeping personnel; and second — operational, relating to interpretation of the standards in their application to particular reports of misconduct. In the light of the experience gained from the latter, a third set of functions of an operational character has taken shape, involving the need to review and elaborate on some of the Bulletin’s standards.

Interpretation and implementation of the Bulletin’s standards of conduct

6. One of the routine functions that Conduct and Discipline Units are called upon to perform relates to interpretation of the standards provided in the Bulletin in their application to prevention activities and individual cases. With the exception of the prohibitions on rape, sexual exploitation and abuse of children, and transactional sex, the experience gained from the application of the Bulletin’s other general standards to particular cases serves to show the inherent complexity of the issues involved, e.g., the Bulletin’s strong discouragement of sexual relations with beneficiaries of assistance. As the Bulletin is also applicable to United Nations funds and programmes, this subject is one of the elements of this year’s workplan of the Task Force on protection from sexual exploitation and abuse of the Executive Committees on Humanitarian Affairs and Peace and Security. It is expected that results of these deliberations will require the development of operational guidance by the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters for mission Conduct and Discipline Units.

B. Other forms of misconduct

7. The Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations, in paragraph 28 of its report, recommended that the capacity of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support to “address all cases of misconduct including sexual exploitation and abuse” should be strengthened, thus recognizing that the broader spectrum of the standards of conduct ought to be effectively enforced, and that, since various forms of misconduct are interconnected, the Organization had to take an integrated approach to address them. Acts of misconduct — no matter their form — unless effectively addressed, can have an insidious effect on institutional controls, resulting in an environment of permissiveness, including sexual exploitation and abuse.

8. Conduct and Discipline Officers in the field perform functions that are pivotal to this integrated approach, and their routine functions encompass all reports of misconduct.

9. A total of 803 (including 357 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse) and 748 (including 127 allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse) allegations were received in 2006 and 2007, respectively, for all peacekeeping personnel. Annex I to the present report provides a breakdown of these statistics by type of offence. Annex II characterizes the various forms of misconduct that the numbers in annex I represent.

10. The classification of the diverse forms of misconduct into categories I and II does not necessarily reflect on the applicable disciplinary measures, or amount of institutional effort involved in their disposition. For example, the severest disciplinary measure of summary dismissal may be imposed on staff in cases involving petty fraud on entitlements, which is under category II.

11. The most prevalent forms of misconduct involving staff in missions concern fraud (including petty fraud), theft, harassment (including sexual), abuse of authority, mismanagement, misuse of the Organization's assets, and traffic-related violations. Significant forms of misconduct by uniformed peacekeeping personnel are harassment, assault, excessive use of force, unlawful discharge of weapon and traffic violations.

III. Enforcement of the United Nations standards of conduct and functions of Conduct and Discipline Units

12. The measures envisaged by the Comprehensive Strategy for enforcement action in response to reports of misconduct, particularly sexual exploitation and abuse, as described in the comprehensive report of the Secretary-General (A/60/862), derive from the general framework of the disciplinary process in the Organization for the various categories of personnel assigned to peacekeeping operations. As such, the Conduct and Discipline Unit functions are better reviewed by reference to the fundamental features of that framework: reporting; investigation; and evaluation of the findings of the investigation.

A. Disciplinary and criminal proceedings following breaches of United Nations standards of conduct

13. Different categories of peacekeeping personnel are subject to the Organization's disciplinary system to varying degrees, and misconduct contrary to the prohibitions of the Bulletin may concurrently constitute a criminal offence warranting institution of criminal proceedings.

14. While staff in peacekeeping missions are subject to the full range of disciplinary measures provided in Staff Regulations and Staff Rules, the Organization's ability to discipline United Nations police officers, members of formed police units, United Nations military observers and members of military contingents (troops), extends at the most to effecting their repatriation on disciplinary grounds — only their respective national authorities being competent to conduct full-fledged disciplinary proceedings. On the other hand, for all categories of peacekeeping personnel, the Organization relies on Member States, e.g., host country or the country of nationality of the suspect, to conduct criminal proceedings for all offences committed by them while serving with the United Nations. The decision to refer a case to national authorities for a criminal investigation is taken in consultation with the Office of Legal Affairs.

15. In its report,¹ the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations mandated a range of activities to address these potential gaps in the accountability framework, and to bring about a “systemic” change in order to ensure accountability of all categories of peacekeeping personnel for, inter alia, sexual exploitation and abuse. Essentially, that range of activities sought to effect revisions to the model memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and troop-contributing countries so that troops — an overwhelming majority of peacekeeping personnel — should be held accountable through disciplinary as well as criminal proceedings, as appropriate, by the troop-contributing countries concerned. The activities also aimed to develop a legal framework enabling criminal prosecution, in addition to disciplinary measures imposed by the Organization, of the United Nations officials and experts on mission, in respect of criminal acts committed by them while serving in peacekeeping missions. In the peacekeeping context, international and local staff are the two main classes of personnel belonging to the category of “officials”; United Nations police, formed police units and United Nations military observers being experts on mission. In addition, the Special Committee also mandated activities to standardize norms of conduct applicable to all categories of peacekeeping personnel.

16. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters has been the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support focal point for the performance of functions arising from the mandated activities. Significant progress has been made in relation to these systemic aspects of the strategy for more effective enforcement of United Nations standards of conduct.

Disciplinary and criminal accountability of military contingent members

17. The finalization in 2007 of revisions to the model memorandum of understanding (see A/61/19 (Part III)) has enhanced the certainty of enforcement action in cases of wrongdoing on the part of military contingent members. As a result, a fundamental set of United Nations standards of conduct, including those on sexual exploitation and abuse, has been incorporated into the model memorandum of understanding, along with an undertaking on the part of the Governments of the troop-contributing countries concerned to bring the full force of their legal sanctions to bear upon enforcement of these standards. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters was a critical resource in rendering assistance to legislative bodies in developing and drafting proposals for revisions in formal and informal consultation with other Secretariat components, and Member States.

18. The adoption of the revised memorandum of understanding has given rise to additional Conduct and Discipline Unit functions for its implementation, e.g., development, in conformity with the model memorandum of understanding, of operational policy and procedures on investigation of reports of misconduct involving members of military contingents, in consultation and coordination with Member States and investigative entities, in particular the Investigations Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services.

Criminal accountability of United Nations officials and experts on mission

19. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters similarly worked with the Group of Legal Experts, whose report (see A/60/980) was considered by the Ad Hoc Committee on Criminal Accountability of United Nations Officials and Experts on Mission set up by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee.

B. Reports and records of misconduct

20. Effective enforcement of United Nations standards of conduct is contingent upon mechanisms for receiving and recording reports of breaches of such standards. The Bulletin imposed an obligation upon the “Head of Department, Office or Mission” to appoint an official at a sufficiently high level to serve as a focal point for receiving reports on cases of sexual exploitation and abuse.⁴ In this regard, in accordance with their terms of reference, Conduct and Discipline Units serve as the central repository of reports of all forms of misconduct. Since their establishment, the mission Conduct and Discipline Units have, as a priority, developed mechanisms and missions’ internal procedures to ensure that all previously responsible or receiving entities of allegations of misconduct, such as the Military Police, the Special Investigation Units of the Security Section and Mission Support, will forward such complaints to the Conduct and Discipline Unit. It has now resulted in the Conduct and Discipline Units being the sole recipients of all allegations of misconduct in the field, with the exception of allegations of misconduct and other complaints that may be directly reported to the Investigations Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services in the field or at Headquarters, and of complaints that may be addressed through other mechanisms.

21. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters is the corresponding central repository of all data relating to all allegations of misconduct in the field. A web-based file-storage mechanism called CyberArk has been developed, which allows users to securely store, transmit, receive and access documents on cases of misconduct. A new comprehensive misconduct tracking system is being finalized, which will allow both Headquarters and the field to share “in real time” consistent data and information on all types of allegations. It will also facilitate and streamline the updating of the database throughout the allegation “cycle” by allowing missions to input new information. Coordination with the Investigations Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services to ensure compatibility and completeness of data is ongoing. The centralized maintenance of data on cases of misconduct provides the basis for quantitative and qualitative analyses of the various forms of misconduct, for the assessment of allocation of resources, and for the development of relevant strategies for preventing misconduct. Furthermore, it is an essential instrument for meeting the Secretariat’s reporting obligations to legislative bodies.

⁴ The Special Committee, in its report (A/59/19/Rev.1) requested the Secretary-General to establish a misconduct data-collection and management system; promulgation by the Secretary-General of whistle-blower policy and assignment of functions to the Ethics Office to administer that policy reflect the importance of the reporting stage to enforcement action.

C. Investigation

22. Upon receipt of a report of misconduct, the available information must be assessed to determine whether a full-fledged investigation is warranted, and if so, to refer it in the context of missions, to the appropriate investigation mechanism (Investigations Division of the Office of Internal Oversight Services in accordance with General Assembly resolution 59/287, or other investigative entities at the mission level).

Initial assessment

23. Mission Conduct and Discipline Units are usually the first to receive allegations and it is their routine function to carry out the initial assessment of all types of reports of misconduct, on the basis of which they will categorize the allegations (category I or category II misconduct) and refer the matter for investigation, if warranted, to the appropriate investigative entity.

24. In cases where reports are general or in the form of rumours, mission Conduct and Discipline Units step up their monitoring activity of the areas associated with the reports, within the framework of their overall preventive activities.

25. A considerable number of reports of misconduct involving peacekeeping personnel received by the Office of Internal Oversight Services directly or from the Conduct and Discipline Units are referred back to missions. Such reports may contain allegations of mismanagement, irregularities and other forms of misconduct, with a request from the Office of Internal Oversight Services that the matter be addressed through appropriate action by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support and/or missions. It is the routine function of the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters to assess and implement appropriate investigative or managerial action in such cases.

26. With the recent approval of the revised memorandum of understanding, as referred to in paragraph 15 above, investigation procedures are changing substantively. Upon notification by the field of a case of serious misconduct, the Department of Field Support, through the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and as appropriate, in consultation with the Office of Legal Affairs, will inform the Permanent Mission of the troop-contributing countries concerned, in order to ascertain whether the Government would depute a national investigating officer or team to investigate the case in cooperation with the Office of Internal Oversight Services. In the light of recent experience, this new requirement has considerably increased the quantum of the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters routine coordination and advisory activities between all parties involved.

Investigations other than those conducted by the Office of Internal Oversight Services

27. The mode of investigation used in relation to reports of misconduct not investigated by the Office of Internal Oversight Services is normally dictated by the category of personnel involved, i.e., a preliminary investigation conducted by the Special Investigation Units (for staff), United Nations police Internal Affairs Unit (for United Nations police officers and formed police units) or Provost Marshall (for military personnel).

28. Upon receipt of the investigation report, the Conduct and Discipline Units review the report and advise the head of mission on the appropriate action to be taken.⁵ The recommendations of the head of mission are transmitted to the Department of Field Support for evaluation and follow-up, as explained below.

D. Evaluation of findings of investigations

Uniformed personnel

29. The findings of misconduct involving uniformed personnel are assessed by the relevant military or police supervisors in consultation with mission Conduct and Discipline Units. In cases of serious misconduct, the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters reviews the dossier, the procedures followed, the propriety of the findings, and the soundness of the resulting recommendations. The Permanent Mission of the concerned individual is notified of the outcome of the investigation by the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters, in consultation with the Police Division or the Office of Military Affairs and, as appropriate, the Office of Legal Affairs.

30. Where considered appropriate, the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support through the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters, advises the mission concerned to repatriate the individual on disciplinary grounds, and enters the individual's name in the database, noting the reason for repatriation and that he or she will not be considered for further service in a peacekeeping mission. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters communicates the decision to the concerned Permanent Mission and requests advice on action taken against the individual after repatriation.

Civilian personnel

31. In cases involving staff, the findings of investigations not conducted by the Office of Internal Oversight Services are assessed by the supervisors concerned at the mission level, in consultation with the Conduct and Discipline Units and, if the allegations are substantiated, the head of mission will recommend appropriate action, whether disciplinary or administrative, to the Department of Field Support.

32. Where findings against staff may warrant referral to the Office of Human Resources Management for institution of disciplinary proceedings, the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters reviews and assesses findings and conducts a substantive analysis of the investigation report and the recommendation made by the head of mission, as relevant, to determine if the case should be submitted for disciplinary action or sent back for administrative or managerial intervention.

33. The review function performed by the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters carries a substantial responsibility and must therefore be a comprehensive and accurate reflection of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support position. That process requires knowledge of previous cases to ensure consistency of recommendations.

IV. Prevention of misconduct in peacekeeping missions, and functions of Conduct and Discipline Units

34. In positing the elimination of sexual exploitation and abuse and other forms of serious misconduct as the objective of the United Nations Comprehensive Strategy, the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations affirmed the paramount importance of preventing such misconduct. As such, Member States have taken positive measures, such as revision of the model memorandum of understanding, in order to strengthen enforcement mechanisms, not least because of their deterrent and, by implication, preventive impact. The preventive element of the strategy envisaged additional measures, in terms of training and raising the awareness of peacekeeping personnel, enhancement of welfare and recreation facilities, and an effective public information policy. Those measures also include outreach activities with the local authorities and communities. At the mission level, the Conduct and Discipline Units have been instrumental in advising heads of mission and other senior management on specific preventive measures to effectively combat sexual exploitation and abuse in their mission areas.

35. Conduct and Discipline Units are responsible for raising awareness of standards of conduct in peacekeeping missions. Target audiences fall into two categories: peacekeeping personnel and host country local communities. With the former, the approach has been based on the distinction between managers and commanders and the various categories of subordinate personnel deployed in peacekeeping operations. The awareness-raising activities with respect to local communities have sought to target local organizations, governmental and non-governmental, and media.

A. Peacekeeping personnel

Capacity-building activities of the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters

36. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters contributes to capacity-building of peacekeeping personnel through development of training and awareness-raising material for use in orientation sessions on sexual exploitation and abuse, e.g., the Conduct and Discipline Unit website and generic training modules, to be used by personnel such as staff of Conduct and Discipline Units, Integrated Training Teams and focal points, and by commanders in military or formed police contingents. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters in coordination with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support Integrated Training Service has produced standard modules on prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse, designed for all levels and categories of peacekeeping personnel. In addition, a documentary training video entitled "To Serve with Pride: Zero Tolerance for Sexual Exploitation and Abuse" was produced by the United Nations Development Programme in conjunction with the Department of Peacekeeping Operations, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, and launched in December 2006.

Capacity-building activities of Conduct and Discipline Units

37. The implementation of preventive strategies for all forms of misconduct constitutes one of the priority tasks of mission Conduct and Discipline Units. They undertake capacity-building and awareness-raising activities for all categories of peacekeeping personnel, including regular training through induction briefings and refresher courses. Since 2005, it has been mandatory for all mission personnel to receive training on sexual exploitation and abuse. Globally, close to 90 per cent of all United Nations personnel in missions have been directly or indirectly trained on sexual exploitation and abuse.

38. Conduct and Discipline Units have also developed a series of “train-the-trainer” workshops, in particular for military and formed police units. In September 2007, the Conduct and Discipline Unit/United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo launched a comprehensive conduct and discipline curriculum in French during a “train-the-trainer” event.

Sensitization of mission managers

39. The sensitization of mission managers is at the core of implementing the strategy to combat sexual exploitation and abuse and other types of misconduct. The commitment and proactive involvement of the mission senior leadership is essential to convey the message of zero tolerance. The Department of Peacekeeping Operations and the Department of Field Support have made the responsibility and accountability of senior managers one of their priorities. To this end, training programmes for existing and prospective senior leadership of missions include a session on conduct and discipline and the role of managers, as role models, to achieve an environment free from all types of misconduct. Representatives of the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters routinely address Senior Mission Leaders’ programmes organized by Peacekeeping Centres around the world. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters also participates in the Department of Peacekeeping Operations Senior Leadership Induction Programmes.

B. Local communities in host countries

40. Mission Conduct and Discipline Units perform vital functions in raising awareness among local communities and the host public at large of standards of conduct and the Organization’s zero-tolerance policy on sexual exploitation and abuse. For example, the Conduct and Discipline Unit/United Nations Mission in Liberia (UNMIL) collaborated with civil society and Liberian authorities as part of its effort to raise their awareness about the United Nations policy on sexual exploitation and abuse, undertaking awareness-raising activities with local non-governmental organizations, women, youth and church groups and traditional community leaders in four districts of Liberia. In June 2007 the Conduct and Discipline Unit/UNMIL held awareness-raising sessions for 492 individuals from communities living in proximity to UNMIL facilities.

Preventive measures at the mission level

41. Conduct and Discipline Units have assisted the heads of mission in discharging their responsibilities for conduct and discipline by advising them on the preventive measures being put in place to protect local communities. In this respect, mission-specific measures and instructions have been issued by heads of mission, force commanders or police commissioners, as appropriate, to ensure that standards of conduct are being adhered to. Some of the most common measures include restriction of movement of personnel in out-of-bounds areas and after certain hours, the wearing of uniforms on and off duty, regulated and supervised recreational activities for uniformed personnel, etc. Furthermore, mission-specific codes of conduct have been developed and are posted in all mission locations. The signature of those codes of conduct by civilian staff, United Nations military observers and United Nations police, as well as by consultants and contractor personnel may be seen as a step in the right direction in making these personnel accountable for their actions and behaviour. Adherence to the principles laid out in the Bulletin is mandated by the conditions of service of other categories of personnel, such as United Nations Volunteers.

42. Additionally, Conduct and Discipline Units have developed a network of sexual exploitation and abuse focal points in the mission or have outposted Conduct and Discipline Officers in the various areas of the mission, depending on availability of resources and workload. They are also conducting regular assessment visits in the various sectors and are developing a network of partners within the United Nations and non-governmental organization community.

43. The establishment of minimum standards of welfare and recreation for all categories of personnel is part of the prevention strategy approved by the Special Committee on Peacekeeping Operations. The Secretary-General's report on the subject (A/62/663) will be reviewed by the Special Committee at its 2008 session.

44. These various preventive measures have resulted in a heightened awareness within local communities and among all categories of peacekeeping personnel of United Nations police on sexual exploitation and abuse. This may account for the decrease in the number of allegations of sexual exploitation and abuse reported in the last year. Nevertheless, continued vigilance, prevention and monitoring by all parties concerned will remain a constant feature of any future effort to combat sexual exploitation and abuse in peacekeeping missions.

V. Remedial action and functions of Conduct and Discipline Units

Assistance to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse

45. By its resolution 62/214, the General Assembly adopted the United Nations Comprehensive Strategy on Assistance and Support to Victims of Sexual Exploitation and Abuse by United Nations Staff and Related Personnel, under which victims would receive assistance to address their needs arising directly from the exploitation or abuse suffered. The Strategy focuses on facilitating assistance within existing services on the ground, which may include medical treatment, counselling, social support, legal services or material care. Victim support facilitators would assist victims in accessing existing services by informing them of what services are available.

46. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters, through its participation in the Executive Committees on Humanitarian Affairs and Peace and Security Task Force, has been actively involved, in conjunction with representatives of other entities and partners, in assisting the work of legislative bodies on this fundamental element of the Comprehensive Strategy. In the field, mission Conduct and Discipline Units have so far acted as focal points for victim assistance, serving as points of contact and referral for victims whose cases may sometimes involve issues of paternity, and support for children born of sexual exploitation and abuse. Conduct and Discipline Units would routinely refer such cases to local or international organizations dealing with such matters.

47. The future role of Conduct and Discipline Units needs to be defined within the parameters of the Strategy, the implementation modalities of which are currently on the agenda of the Executive Committees on Humanitarian Affairs and Peace and Security Task Force. As an integrated implementation mechanism will be developed at the country level, it is likely that in those countries where Conduct and Discipline Units are established, they will be heavily involved in the discussions and decisions, leading to the development and establishment of these mechanisms. It can be anticipated that the operational policy and procedures that will be determined by the Task Force will conceivably expand routine, victim assistance-related functions performed by Conduct and Discipline Units.

VI. Development of policies and procedures and functions of Conduct and Discipline Units

48. The development of policies and procedures pertaining to conduct and discipline takes place at different levels. Legislative bodies have adopted general statements of policy, such as the model memorandum of understanding, General Assembly resolution 62/214 on assistance to victims, the report of the Group of Legal Experts on standardization of norms of conduct (A/61/645), General Assembly resolution 62/63 on criminal accountability of the United Nations officials and experts on mission. Policy directives, standard operating procedures, manuals and guidelines developed at Headquarters, regulate and streamline important issues and activities concerning conduct and discipline. These are subsequently adapted, as appropriate, at the mission level by mission Conduct and Discipline Units. Other operational material is developed on the basis of actual practice at Headquarters or in the field, e.g., maintenance of misconduct data, assessment missions, guidance, etc.

49. While progress has been made in the development by the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters of the regulatory framework, new guidelines and Standard Operating Procedures are still required to address new policies that have recently been adopted and changes in the modalities of implementation of some existing processes.

50. A related set of functions concerns the reporting responsibilities of the Secretariat to legislative bodies on issues of conduct and discipline. Given the seriousness with which legislative bodies view the issue of sexual exploitation and abuse, they have exercised consistent oversight on the response of the Organization, requesting reports on different aspects of the problem. The Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters contributes to the performance of those reporting responsibilities, thereby assisting continuing oversight by Member States.

VII. Post resources, staffing levels and functions of the conduct and discipline capacities at Headquarters and in the field

51. Sections III to VI of the present report address in detail functions of the Conduct and Discipline Unit of the Department of Field Support and Conduct and Discipline Units in the field related to the implementation of the United Nations Comprehensive Strategy related to issues of conduct and discipline in peacekeeping missions. In order to ensure implementation of the Strategy and of the Organization's "zero-tolerance" policy on sexual exploitation and abuse, there is a continued need for dedicated and ongoing core full-time capacities at Headquarters and in the field to address issues of conduct and discipline in peacekeeping missions. Those functions fall into three broad basic interrelated categories: advisory and policy development; case management; and preventive activities. While at the Secretariat level, the policy-related functions include support to legislative bodies in establishing the overall framework of the Organization's disciplinary policy, in the field those functions are of a more operational nature in the form of the development of mission-specific operational guidance material.

52. Both at Headquarters and in missions, case-related functions have two major aspects: substantive handling of individual cases, and maintenance of databases of reported cases. These databases provide the basis, inter alia, for conduct of a range of analyses enabling flexible, targeted use of resources in response to particular trends. In terms of preventive activities, mission Conduct and Discipline Units have a core responsibility to assist mission leadership to achieve the "zero tolerance" objective, through a variety of training programmes, briefings and outreach/awareness-raising programmes and coordination, as well as through regular assessment visits to outlying regions.

53. The above-mentioned categories of specific functions underpin the terms of reference of Conduct and Discipline Units as set out in the annexes to the Secretary-General's comprehensive report on sexual exploitation and abuse (A/60/862), and reflect the multifaceted role of Conduct and Discipline Units. Accordingly, the skill-types of individuals who staff Conduct and Discipline Units at Headquarters and in missions derive from these categories of functions and, apart from managerial staff, include policy officers, disciplinary officers, reports officers, training officers and support staff.

54. Annex III to the present report consolidates the staffing resources at Headquarters and in the field for the budget periods 2007-2008 and 2008-2009, for information purposes.

A. Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters

55. As detailed in annex III to the present report, in the current financial year (2007-08), the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters staffing comprises nine posts (7 Professional posts and 2 General Service posts) and three general temporary assistance positions. The proposed staffing establishment of the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters envisages continued allocation of the present level of resources except for the elimination of one existing P-4 Policy Officer general temporary assistance position and the addition of two general temporary assistance positions at the P-3 level (1 Disciplinary Officer and 1 Programme Officer). These proposed changes are addressed in the context of the proposed support account budget for 2008-2009.

56. The Chief of Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters has managerial functions and oversees the Unit's operations. The Chief provides guidance, direction and supervision of staff. In addition to advising senior management of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support and senior leadership in the field on policies and strategies relating to conduct and discipline, as well as follow-up action on particularly sensitive cases, the Chief represents the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support on disciplinary issues at the senior level in interdepartmental policymaking forums and legislative bodies; provides briefings on conduct and discipline issues to Member States and senior leadership; and is involved in media outreach. The Chief also performs vital functions in relation to sensitization of senior mission managers to the organizational policy on disciplinary matters. The post is classified at the D-1 level owing to: the substantive character of the managerial functions it involves; the inherent importance of issues of conduct and discipline; the nature and extent of internal and external liaison and coordination that the incumbent is routinely called upon to undertake at senior managerial levels.

57. The Senior Policy Adviser (P-5) serves as the deputy to the Chief and is responsible for: providing policy guidance and strategic direction on misconduct issues to the Conduct and Discipline Officers at Headquarters and in the field; assisting the chief in planning, management and implementation of the activities of the Unit; the development of systems, measures and mechanisms to prevent, identify and respond to misconduct by all categories of mission personnel; provision of technical guidance on disciplinary procedures; provision of substantive input for the preparation of reports and development of policies; and identification of lessons learned and best practices relating to the conduct of personnel.

58. The P-5 Senior Conduct and Discipline Officer reviews and drafts policies and procedures on conduct and discipline issues and consults with internal and external entities on implementation; ensures coherence between discipline-related policies, procedures and guidelines relating to all categories of peacekeeping personnel; monitors decisions of the Secretariat and of Member States affecting disciplinary issues relating to peacekeeping personnel. The P-5 Officer is also responsible for drafting inputs on disciplinary issues for reports to legislative bodies and provides expert briefings on conduct and discipline.

59. Disciplinary Officers (P-4 and P-3) perform functions that are substantially analytical, evaluative, conceptual and interpretative in individual cases at various stages of their disposition. They provide backstopping support to mission Conduct and Discipline Units, and routinely carry out extensive liaison work with Permanent Missions to the United Nations of various Member States in relation to individual cases of misconduct. Given their wide-ranging functions, and the skills and extent of experience required for their performance, the level of responsibility inherent in the performance of such functions justifies their classification at the P-4 level. The P-3 Disciplinary Officer performs similar functions in relation to cases that do not involve the most serious acts of misconduct.

60. The P-3 Programme Officer assists the Chief, the Senior Policy Adviser and the Senior Conduct and Discipline Officer in the implementation and follow-up of activities related to training and awareness-raising projects, the Comprehensive Strategy for victim assistance, and coordination of the Executive Committees on Humanitarian Affairs and Peace and Security Task Force.

61. The Reports Officer (P-2) is the focal point in the Unit for maintaining the data management system for reports involving all categories of personnel, including reporting formats and a database. He or she produces narrative and statistical reports on all aspects of personnel misconduct, as required, and conducts analyses and related research on personnel conduct issues and maintains ongoing coordination with counterparts in mission Conduct and Discipline Units.

62. Two Administrative Assistants (General Service (Other level)) provide general administrative support to the Unit. Owing to the volume of allegations and investigations from field missions, there is a significant amount of filing, sorting and follow-up to correspondence.

63. One Administrative Assistant (General Service (Other level)) supports the P-2 Reports Officer in the maintenance of the database, in particular in the context of the introduction of the new data management tracking system and the subsequent migration of data from the old system to the new one.

B. Conduct and Discipline Units in peacekeeping missions

64. While the functions performed by field Conduct and Discipline Units in missions are largely a subset of those of the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters, there are significant differences of scale and emphasis between the two, as indicated in paragraphs 51 and 52 above. These differences are reflected in the missions' respective approaches to conduct and discipline functional requirements in their respective areas of deployment.

65. The total number of posts and general temporary assistance positions in missions depends to a large extent on the size of the mission and the risks of possible occurrence of misconduct. A risk assessment carried out for the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur resulted in the approval by the General Assembly, in the context of the mission's proposed 2007/08 budget, of a decentralized structure of 27 posts and general temporary assistance positions for that mission alone owing to the identified high risk of sexual exploitation and abuse cases, in view of the presence of internally displaced persons, and the overall extreme poverty level.

66. In the current financial year (2007-08), the staffing allocated to mission Conduct and Discipline Units comprises 58 posts and 52 general temporary assistance positions, as indicated in annex III to the present report. The proposed individual peacekeeping operation budgets for 2008-09 envisage continued allocation of the present level of resources in all missions except for the United Nations Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire, with the justification of additional requirements provided in the proposed budgets for these missions.

67. Chiefs of Conduct and Discipline Units in missions are either at the D-1 or P-5 level, depending on the size of the mission. They provide leadership to the Unit and strategic guidance to the head of mission and senior mission leadership on all conduct and discipline issues. They are responsible for preparing the workplan of the team, and developing measures to raise awareness about United Nations standards of conduct and prevent personnel misconduct, as well as mechanisms to identify trends in personnel misconduct and ensure compliance with United Nations standards of conduct. They are also responsible for ensuring that a comprehensive training strategy on the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse is fully implemented. They oversee data management and tracking of all forms of misconduct for all categories of peacekeeping personnel, and liaise with the Office of Internal Oversight Services on allegations and investigations into personnel misconduct. They liaise with the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters on policy guidance and follow-up cases being investigated. They also coordinate and liaise with other United Nations entities, non-governmental organizations and governmental representatives in the mission area on conduct and discipline issues, including issues related to victim assistance.

68. Conduct and Discipline Officers at the P-4 and P-3 levels are principally responsible for receiving and documenting complaints, providing advice on whether the mission should accept and act on them, as appropriate, gathering information and conducting initial fact-finding through the impartial and independent examination of such complaints. They also provide recommendations on preventative and remedial action to be taken on conduct and discipline issues, liaise with investigators to identify preventative and remedial action required as a result of the investigation, and liaise with individuals and organizations involved in a complaint and the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters on allegations, investigations and follow-up action relating to personnel misconduct.

69. In addition to case management-related functions, the Conduct and Discipline Officers are also responsible for a variety of other functions. With the exception of those missions with dedicated training capacity (see para. 70 below), the Conduct and Discipline Officers perform the training and capacity-building functions as required by missions. Furthermore, they are responsible for awareness-raising, outreach and coordination activities. They will conduct regular visits to various locations within the mission to assess the status of conduct and discipline, provide advice and guidance to personnel deployed there, conduct briefings and information sessions on the sexual exploitation and abuse policy, establish and maintain contact with the mission's sexual exploitation and abuse focal points, where they exist, as well as with the network of non-governmental organizations and other agencies involved in the area of assistance to victims of sexual exploitation and abuse. Depending on the size of the mission, National Professional Officers will provide additional support, particularly in liaising and coordinating with local partner agencies in the area on awareness-raising and outreach with the local communities.

70. Larger peacekeeping missions (MONUC and UNAMID in particular) include P-4 and P-3 Conduct and Discipline Officers dedicated to providing training on the prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse to all categories of personnel, as well as on conduct and discipline issues in general. The P-4 officers are responsible for the substantive development of training materials, the definition and implementation of the training strategy, while the P-3 officers deliver the training programmes, including "train-the-trainer" programmes. These functions are complemented by National Professional Officers with local knowledge of the country's socio-economic background. In this respect, they provide substantive inputs to the development of training materials locally by field Conduct and Discipline Units and impart training as required to various categories of personnel. In missions with a decentralized Conduct and Discipline Unit structure, such as the United Nations

Operation in Côte d'Ivoire or the United Nations Mission in the Sudan, P-4 and P-3 Conduct and Discipline Officers are outposted in outlying areas and sectors. Their functions encompass receiving complaints, training and outreach. They may be supported by National Professional Officers. This approach enables a more direct presence of Conduct and Discipline Officers in the field, thereby enhancing the ability of each Conduct and Discipline Unit to better advise management and maintain closer contact with local communities, representatives of non-governmental organizations and other agencies present on the ground.

71. The Reports Officer functions are at the P-3 or P-2 level as this position is considered to be more technical in nature and because the Reports Officer will in all cases work under the close supervision of either the Chief or the Deputy Chief of the Conduct and Discipline Units. They are responsible for setting up and maintaining the allegations database and producing regular statistical reports on the basis of which they undertake trend analysis of the status of misconduct in their respective missions.

72. None of the special political missions has a Conduct and Discipline Unit per se, but single Conduct and Discipline Officers. This is due mainly to the fact that these missions usually do not have police or military components and the number of civilian staff is smaller than in peacekeeping operations.

73. Finally, all Conduct and Discipline Units have a variable number of support staff, both international and national, to assist in the management of the database and the translation of documents, and to provide the general administrative and logistical support of the teams.

74. The present report provides justification of staffing levels, functions, and their impact on conduct and discipline for the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and Conduct and Discipline Units in the field. Given the commitment and critical importance placed by Member States on combating and addressing misconduct in peacekeeping operations, in particular in respect of sexual exploitation and abuse, my personal commitment and pledge from the outset to achieving a policy of "zero tolerance" and the responsibilities of the Organization as a whole to uphold the highest standards of integrity and respect vis-à-vis the populations the United Nations is mandated to protect, the functions that are currently performed by the Conduct and Discipline Units both at Headquarters and in the field relate to the very core of the Organization's mandate and responsibilities. Without a continued dedicated capacity to address misconduct issues, my Office would not be in a position to confidently assure the membership that all efforts are being made to address these concerns from the field level upwards and that Conduct and Discipline Units have contributed to advancing my agenda in this regard and that the Comprehensive Strategy has started to bear fruit. More needs to be done and constant vigilance is required.

75. Based on the justification in the present report of conduct and discipline staffing levels, functions and their impact on conduct and discipline for the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and Conduct and Discipline Teams in the field, it is proposed to convert into posts all general temporary assistance positions at Headquarters and in the field for the budget period 2008-2009, as the functions performed are ongoing and fully integrated into the mandate and operations of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support and the missions, and are not to be considered temporary in nature. It is also requested to approve the use of uniform nomenclature i.e., “Conduct and Discipline Units”, for Headquarters and missions.

76. Pending consideration by the General Assembly of the proposals contained in paragraph 75 above and its decisions thereon, the proposed 2008/09 peacekeeping operations support account budget and individual peacekeeping operations budgets, where applicable, include conduct and discipline staffing requirements in accordance with resolution 61/276, section XVI, paragraph 6, in which the General Assembly decided to convert 7 temporary positions at Headquarters and 41 temporary positions in the field into posts and to authorize that the remaining positions in the field be funded from general temporary assistance. In this connection, should the General Assembly approve the proposed conversion of all conduct and discipline general temporary assistance positions to posts, there will be no financial implications for the 2008/09 period for the peacekeeping operations support account or individual peacekeeping missions, where applicable.

VIII. Impact of the Conduct and Discipline Units

77. The foregoing account of the core specific functions performed by the Conduct and Discipline Unit at Headquarters and Conduct and Discipline Units reflects on their role as mechanisms for internal oversight of conduct, discipline and accountability within the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support and peacekeeping missions. The presence of the Conduct and Discipline Units in the field and the performance of these functions have contributed significantly to progress by the Organization in establishing aspects of a framework of operational policies and procedures that makes for coherent and effective responsive action with respect to misconduct by peacekeepers.

78. As mentioned above, significant progress has been made to bring about systemic changes — the finalization of revisions to the model memorandum of understanding, and victim assistance strategy are in point. While actively involved in deliberations for strengthening criminal accountability of United Nations officials and experts on mission, the legislative bodies are set to consider a framework for provision of minimum levels of welfare and recreation facilities to all categories of peacekeeping personnel and to adopt a common code of conduct for all categories of peacekeeping personnel.

79. Significant headway has been made at the operational level. Establishment of Conduct and Discipline Units is a distinct improvement on former arrangements, when handling of cases of different categories of personnel — being compartmentalized in different structures — was fragmented, ad hoc and piecemeal. In its report entitled, “Oversight lacunae in the United Nations system” (JIU/REP/2006/2, para. 8),⁶ the Joint Inspection Unit reiterated the advantages of having such functions consolidated “in a single unit ... reporting directly to the executive head”, which included greater flexibility and responsiveness, less overlap and coordination, significant economies of scale and enhanced professionalism. Conduct and Discipline Units, as mechanisms for internal monitoring of conduct and discipline, directly answering to heads of mission and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations/Department of Field Support, have enhanced the ability of these heads to take a “holistic approach” to issues of misconduct, and effectively discharge their disciplinary responsibilities.

80. In peacekeeping missions, the more vigorous, coherent and consistent operational activity in disciplinary matters since 2005 appears to have begun to show some signs of improvement. A comparative review of the available records on the total annual number of reports alleging sexual exploitation and abuse as shown in annex I suggests that the strategy may be beginning to bear fruit.

IX. Conclusion

81. The challenge of addressing misconduct arises from a variety of factors such as the circumstances under which missions are launched and operate, the different categories and number of personnel deployed, and their high turnover. The mechanisms in place to address conduct and discipline issues have to work in harmony to ensure both the prevention of misconduct and effective accountability when acts of misconduct are committed. These mechanisms count upon the active ownership by the membership of these issues, including proactive leadership on the ground by military and police commanders at all levels, and the senior civilian leadership in preventing and responding in particular to the problem of sexual exploitation and abuse. The work of Conduct and Discipline Units significantly contributes to the Organization’s ability to harness the various mechanisms available to combat impunity for misconduct, in particular, for sexual exploitation and abuse. In the matrix of functions that together constitute peacekeeping, those of Conduct and Discipline Units are of the essence. The Organization needs to continue to make adequate provision for their performance in order to ensure that the trust vested in peacekeepers by Member States and their peoples is not broken.

X. Actions to be taken by the General Assembly at the second resumed part of the sixty-second session

82. The General Assembly may wish to:

- (a) Take note of the report;
- (b) Approve the conversion of general temporary assistance positions to posts for the period 2008-2009, as well as the use of uniform nomenclature as requested in paragraph 75 of the present report.
