Item 4 of the provisional agenda*

Country note

Republic of Moldova

Summary

The Executive Director presents the country note for the Republic of Moldova for a programme of cooperation for the period 2002 to 2006.

The situation of children and women

1. Children (1.3 million under 18 years of age) and women of the Republic of Moldova continue to suffer the negative consequences of transition. The Republic of Moldova is one of the poorest countries in the Central and Eastern Europe, Commonwealth of Independent States and Baltic States region, with a per capita gross national product of $370 (1999). Some 35 per cent of the total population of 4.3 million live below the poverty line. Social development is hampered by unemployment, greater inequality in the distribution of income and inflation. Reduced budgetary allocations to the social sector have led to the worsening of major social indicators and the deterioration of the quality of and access to social services.

2. The poor status of children's health is reflected in infant and under-five mortality rates of 27 and 34 per 1,000 live births, respectively. The maternal mortality ratio of 28 per 100,000 live births (1999) is caused mainly by pregnancy-related pathologies and puerperal infections. Almost 28 per cent of children under five years old and 20 per cent of women of reproductive age suffer from anaemia. According to the Ministry of Health, 22 per cent of school-aged children have iodine deficiency disorders.

3. HIV/AIDS is spreading rapidly. To date, 1,110 cases of HIV infection have been identified, out of which 27 have developed AIDS. Children and young people aged 15 to 19 years represent 15 per cent of all HIV cases. The significant increase in sexually transmitted infections (STIs), from 7 per 100,000 population in 1989 to 200 in 1999, is also a cause for concern.

4. The combined effects of poverty and cuts in social sector investments have weakened family capacity to protect children. The number of children in need of special protection, such as those deprived of parental care and family life, continues to grow. Public care system responses rely heavily on residential care, including for children with disabilities. According to the latest governmental data, 12,344 children reside in institutions.

5. The quality of basic education has decreased substantially over the past decade due to the lack of adequate funding. This adversely affected the conditions of the learning environment, including increases in disparities. Another problem is the lack of relevance in the curriculum, and children are exiting the system without basic life skills. Rising costs of education services and supplies have prevented access to basic education for the most vulnerable. According to the World Bank, over 15 per cent of children of the poorest families do not attend primary school. Pre-school education has been severely affected. In rural areas, 80 per cent of children stay at home until entering primary school and have no access to early childhood development opportunities.

6. Decreasing opportunities for continuing education, and the development of livelihood related to employment and for meaningful participation and access to organized free time activities, are increasing the risks for adolescents and young people to become exposed to crime, alcohol and drug abuse. Problems affecting young people include the lack of communication and support from family and community, and drop out from the formal school system. It is estimated that 2,422 adolescents 14-17 years old committed offences and crimes in 1999.

Lessons learned from past cooperation

7. UNICEF partnerships with other United Nations agencies, as well as advocacy with and technical support to governmental institutions, have contributed to strengthening the primary health care (PHC) system, improving breastfeeding rates and promoting quality perinatal services. Other programme areas, including child protection, would benefit from strengthened coordination with partners.

8. The slow progress made by the decentralization process has highlighted the need to improve the managerial and planning capacities of local authorities, a point reinforced during sectoral strategy meetings with counterparts. The evaluation process has also stressed the need for improvement in the areas of intersectoral planning and implementation.

9. A new model of early child care and development (ECCD) was successfully tested in different parts of the country based on partnerships with kindergartens, families and communities. Based on a programme review, community empowerment and participation will be supported. Increasing family participation and knowledge and supporting social networks have proven to be sustainable.

Proposed country programme strategy

10. The overall priorities and programme strategies are based on the results of the situation analysis, technical assessments, evaluations, sectoral strategy meetings and a final consultation with the Government, civil society organizations and United Nations agencies. These were preceded by regular meetings with the Government, United Nations agencies, and local and international non-governmental organizations (NGOs). The cooperation strategy is also based on the draft Common Country Assessment and will contribute to the elaboration of the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF).

11. The main goal of the 2002-2006 programme is to support national efforts to alleviate poverty through fulfilling the rights of children, young people and women in line with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. The overall life cycle outcomes are based on the New Global Agenda for Children, national social development priorities and the UNICEF medium-term plan. The major objectives include: improved maternal and child health (MCH) and development; expanded access to early childhood care; better protection of vulnerable children and young people; and the promotion of youth development and participation.

12. Three cross-cutting strategies will be part of each programme: capacity-building; the promotion of integrated basic services; and social mobilization. Capacity-building at national and subnational levels will improve the quality of management, planning and coordination in the social sectors, and enhance child-centred policy development. Family and community empowerment will improve knowledge about child health and development. The promotion of integrated and decentralized basic social services will be supported. Social mobilization with central and local authorities, civil society, children and young people will strengthen partnerships for promoting rights within the framework of the Global Movement for Children.

13. The programme structure will be composed of three interrelated programmes: ECCD; child protection; and young people's health, development and participation. Close coordination between the programmes will be emphasized to enable a strong integrated approach in addressing the issues of ECCD protection, gender equity and community development. Implementation of an integrated monitoring and evaluation plan will ensure effective programme implementation. Cooperation with United Nations agencies will be strengthened in the framework of the UNDAF process (child protection, HIV/AIDS prevention, health reform and community development). The country programme will emphasize increased cooperation with the World Bank (health reform, child protection) and the European Union (health reform), as well as with donor agencies and international and local NGOs.

14. The ECCD programme will ensure quality in health, nutrition and the psychosocial development of children in the very early stage of the life cycle, and in the needs of mothers. The programme objectives include: the promotion of cost-effective and efficient MCH activities to contribute to the development of public health capacities and accessible and sustainable PHC systems; and increased access to and improved quality of ECCD practices.

15. The programme will focus on improving the knowledge of families and caregivers on ECCD by promoting the Integrated Management of Childhood Illness initiative. Special attention will be given to reinforcing legislation for the protection of women's health, thus strengthening antenatal care and reproductive health services. Nutritional status will be improved through the promotion of iodized salt consumption, the prevention of iron deficiency and the promotion of exclusive breastfeeding.

16. ECCD will be expanded throughout the country, including through the formal and non-formal school systems. Existing pre-school and school facilities will play an important role in community development and participation by providing parents, teachers and PHC workers with knowledge about early child health and development. Family- and community-centred approaches will be promoted and supported through the Better Parenting Initiative.

17. The child protection programme will address the rights of children deprived of parental care, including children with disabilities. The overall aim of this programme is to strengthen family capacities to ensure child development, recovery and reintegration. The protection measures will include support to child care system reform, with the aim of ensuring family-centred outcomes. UNICEF will contribute to the development of appropriate social policies within health and education systems to ensure access to excluded groups, such as children from poor families and those with disabilities. Support will be also provided for the modification of legal norms and procedures to ensure that family-based care is given priority as opposed to the placement of children in residential care. In addition, special attention will be given to juvenile justice system reform.

18. Contributing to the development of social policy and legislation will be an important strategic emphasis of the cooperation. UNICEF will assist national partners in the development of national databases related to children's rights, and ensure the use of the data for policy development and monitoring. Activities will include technical assistance to improve social statistics. Support will also be provided for the publication of child rights' materials and the strengthening of national documentation.

19. Government institutions at both national and local levels will be assisted in improving their capacities to assess, monitor and evaluate implementation of the two Conventions. Activities will include research on emerging issues, including child labour, children in conflict with the law, domestic violence and trafficking, followed by appropriate programme interventions.

20. The young people's health, development and participation programme will promote access of young people to a range of opportunities and services that are fundamental to their development and ability to contribute to their families and communities. It will also support the participation of young people in decisions that affect their lives. The specific objectives will be: (a) to promote child and youth participation; (b) to improve and protect the health of adolescents and young people; and (c) to reduce the incidence of HIV and other STIs.

21. A wide range of activities will be developed based on youth participation, including peer education and communication activities for the prevention of HIV/AIDS and STIs and life skills education. The programme will also support further development of democratization practices with the local child and youth councils and children's parliament.

22. UNICEF will promote the concept of children- and youth-friendly environments, and will encourage the involvement of youth in the development of policies on rights and gender equity. Adolescent health will be addressed through the development of youth-friendly services based on health education activities. The formulation of studies with adolescents on problems and issues they face will be promoted in order to identify and support the development of appropriate national strategies and local responses.

23. The cross-sectoral costs will cover programme support staff, consultants, and programme and project support, including costs of supervision, monitoring and field follow-up of programme implementation. UNICEF will also support the development of national emergency preparedness strategies. The Moldova office is part of the area office based in Bucharest.
