Seventy-fourth session

Agenda item 8

General debate

Letter dated 30 September 2019 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General

In accordance with the published instructions for the right of reply, the United Kingdom would like to exercise the right of reply in response to a statement of the distinguished representative of Mauritius.

On 27 September, under agenda item 8 of the seventy-fourth session of the General Assembly, the general debate, the representative of Mauritius made reference to the Chagos Archipelago, further to which the United Kingdom wishes to place the following statement in the official record of proceedings:

The United Kingdom has no doubt about its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, which has been under continuous British sovereignty since 1814. Mauritius has never held sovereignty over the islands that now form the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT) and we do not recognize its claim. However, we have a long-standing commitment, first made in 1965, to cede sovereignty of the territory to Mauritius when it is no longer required for defence purposes. We stand by that commitment.

This is a bilateral dispute, not a decolonization issue. The United Kingdom was disappointed that this matter was referred to the International Court of Justice, contrary to the principle that the Court should not consider bilateral disputes without the consent of both States concerned. An advisory opinion is advice provided to the United Nations General Assembly at its request; it is not a legally binding judgment.

The joint United Kingdom-United States defence facility on BIOT helps to keep people in Britain and around the world safe, and combat some of the most challenging threats to international peace and security. The facility also remains ready for a rapid response in times of humanitarian crisis in the region. These functions are only possible under the sovereignty of the United Kingdom.

Like successive Governments before it, the United Kingdom Government has expressed its sincere regret about the manner in which Chagossians were removed from BIOT in the late 1960s and early 1970s. Substantial compensation

(around £15.5 million in current prices) has been paid to Chagossians since that time in full and final settlement. The United Kingdom is currently designing an approximately £40 million discretionary support package, to improve Chagossian livelihoods in the communities where they now live.

I should be grateful if you would circulate the present letter as a document of the General Assembly, under agenda item 8.
