Results and resources framework for Tunisia (2015-2019)	7

I. Programme justification

1. Tunisia is a middle-income country with a high level of human development with a largely urban and young population of 10.77 million (26.7 per cent are under the age of 15). With an average annual growth rate of 5 per cent for the past three decades, the country has long been considered a model of economic success.

2. However, the events of January 2011 revealed the limitations of a system resulting in less and less solidarity between different parts of the country and between generations, raising questions about the appropriateness of the development model that has predominated since the 1980s and about both the effectiveness of public policies and the efficiency of a resource allocation system aligned with sectoral priorities.

3. Despite real economic and social progress, unemployment remains high (15.7 per cent), particularly among young graduates (33.5 per cent), and especially among young women (43.5 per cent). The poverty rate (15.4 per cent in 2010) barely reflects the vulnerability of numerous segments of the population and the depth of income disparities and regional inequalities. The (2004, 2014) reports on progress towards achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) also indicated that while, at the national level, the likelihood of reaching targets by 2015 appears to be promising, deep regional disparities remain.

4. Despite the relative resilience of the economy to the shocks in 2011 and the crisis in the Euro zone, reforms appear to be needed in macroeconomic, fiscal and financial policies, as well as in the labour market and in the educational system. While there has been no five-year plan since 2012, major challenges worth noting have to do with: (a) defining a new view of development; (b) enhancing the effectiveness and efficiency of sectoral policies and resources; (c) restoring competitiveness to the economy and redirecting it towards technologically new and knowledge-based sectors with high value-added and the capacity to generate sustainable jobs and incomes and employment; (d) conducting more in-depth analyses of poverty and vulnerability; and (e) swiftly reducing unemployment and regional inequalities as part of a decentralization and local development policy.

5. The upheaval in the wake of the 2011 revolution has triggered pressing demands for social justice, freedom and dignity. It has opened up a path towards a promising democratic transition aimed at establishing the rule of law and institutions capable of responding to citizens' aspirations. This process has revealed the pervasiveness of authoritarian practices and underscored structural frailties accentuating the unequal distribution of the fruits of growth. Significant steps have been taken to remedy this, including organization of free elections, adoption of a new Constitution, the transitional justice process, and efforts to combat corruption, in addition to reforms in the judicial and security sectors.

6. The Constitution of January 2014 is the result of broad consensus in the political class, reflecting the aspirations of most citizens and endowing the Constitution with inclusiveness and social legitimacy. It also upholds the universality of human rights and gender equality and establishes independent bodies and regulatory organs to consolidate democracy and the rule of law. Furthermore, Tunisia has signed or ratified new international conventions, voted for transitional justice laws, and established conditions conducive to freedom of expression and a free press, as well as burgeoning civil society and citizen participation initiatives.

7. While undoubtedly blessed with many features needed to complete the transition under way, Tunisia is also challenged by: (a) a still weakly anchored rule of law, in terms of access to security and effective justice; (b) excessive centralization of the decision-making process and regions still lacking the autonomy and resources needed to forge a genuine local development dynamic and reduce the feeling that regions are excluded; (c) low level of citizen participation, particularly on the part of youth and women, especially in rural areas; and (d) little responsiveness and accountability of the administration and of institutions to citizens' expectations, above all when it comes to the quality of services provided.

8. In collaboration with the United Nations system, in 2011 UNDP developed a Transition Strategy for Tunisia (TST) whose implementation has led to certain lessons being drawn:

- Whereas in the preceding cycle, the UNDP contribution was – although in line with national priorities – uneven, with convincing outcomes above all in the environment and energy sectors, the emphasis in 2001-2013 was on supporting democratic governance (Assessment of Development Results [ADR] 2011);
- Thus the TST enabled UNDP to support key dimensions, including an inclusive constitutional process and promotion of a national dialogue on major reforms, particularly as regards efforts to combat corruption, advance transitional justice and strengthen the rule of law. That repositioning resulted in greater credibility of UNDP vis-à-vis its national counterpart and the creditor and donor community;
- While UNDP mainly supported initiatives to boost the economy of targeted regions in 2001-2013, dimensions relating to monitoring of the MDGs, poverty reduction, lessening of regional disparities, stimulation of more dynamic local economies, and generation of sustainable livelihoods need to be reinforced in order to perpetuate recent progress during the transition.

9. It is also worth highlighting the need to:

- Incorporate activities undertaken in a framework of lasting support and involve civil society players, within a context of stronger social accountability mechanisms designed to foster ownership of reforms and their perpetuation;
- Build on gains made with the constitutional process to strengthen the capacity of democratic institutions, particularly that of Parliament, the electoral authorities, and the body responsible for advancing transitional justice;
- Assist Government efforts to stimulate employment and develop programmes for encouraging innovation and access to knowledge;
- Promote an integrated approach to support planning and coordination among development actors at the local level, to help create a critical mass of impacts and raise awareness nationwide of public policies to reduce poverty, generate jobs and foster inclusive growth;
- Support Government efforts to coordinate assistance from partners with enhancing the effectiveness of sectoral policies;
- Consolidate the targeting of fields and areas where action is needed, to reinforce actions undertaken;

- Assist efforts of the Government and domestic partners to share the experiences acquired and lessons learned during the transition in Tunisia, both regionally and globally.

10. Based on each one's comparative advantages, close cooperation will be sought with the following entities: OHCHR, UNESCO, UNODC and UNOPS on governance matters; UNIDO, ILO, UNCTAD and UNOPS on income and employment generation; FAO, UNCDF, IFAD, UN-Women, IOM and UNV for regional development, ESCWA, UNICEF, UNFPA, WHO, UN-Women and UNAIDS on poverty, vulnerability, social protection, and gender matters; and OCHA, FAO, UNHCR, UNEP and IOM on issues relating crisis and disaster prevention and management.

11. Synergies will also be sought with traditional bilateral and multilateral partners, as well as with emerging donors, in areas relating to economic and social inclusion, employment, regional development and the environment, as well matters to do with support for democratic governance and citizen participation. In those aspects, UNDP will also collaborate with the private sector and support public-private partnership.

12. Overall aid effectiveness will, however, benefit from implementation by the Government of a holistic mechanism for coordinating, managing and monitoring aid, sectoral policies and reforms, which will be supported by UNDP.

II. Programme priorities and partnerships

13. In response to national priorities, the proposed programme follows the guidelines established in the 2014-2017 Strategic Plan and aims to support Tunisia, during a pivotal period of its transition, in building a democratic system and an inclusive and sustainable growth model conducive to reductions in poverty, inequality and exclusion, particularly at the local level.

14. Special emphasis will be placed on young people, women, segments of the population with special needs, and the most vulnerable parts of the country. Capacity-building for actors will also be a core component of the intervention strategy.

15. This programme – geared to four principal outcomes – is presented below for the three substantive areas of work adopted in the 2014-2017 Strategic Plan.

Sustainable development pathways

16. The programme seeks to help the Government implement new public policies capable of resulting in significant progress with respect to human development, poverty reduction and employment generation, particularly for youth and women. UNDP aims to contribute to the following changes.

17. Development planning, policy reforms and advocacy by: (a) supporting the development of a forward-looking approach to development that incorporates sustainable development goals (SDGs) and is conducive to the implementation of an accelerated and inclusive growth strategy, support for effective and coordinated public policies, and the creation of sustainable livelihoods; (b) supporting the improvement of planning tools and strengthening strategic management of development functions, particularly by reviving planning/programming tools and making sure that they are operationally consistent; (c) boosting national social statistics capabilities in the area of human development and poverty, which are vital for discerning the dynamics of poverty and contributing to the establishment of coherent and effective public policies; and (d) promoting mechanisms for coordinating sectoral policies and managing external funding.

18. Planning at subnational levels: UNDP seeks, through an integrated approach, to support the improvement of living conditions in two pilot zones detected in governorates with the lowest human development scores, by capacity-building for the players involved and stimulating local economies within a framework of participatory coordination and planning built around and taking advantage of public investments, private initiatives, and decentralized cooperation initiatives. This support is intended to: (a) foster an inclusive growth dynamic at the local level; (b) support employment and sustainable livelihoods generation; (c) enhance access to financing and skills development as a means for expanding access to inclusive microfinance and technology, tailored in particular to women's needs; and (d) develop capacities for dialogue and consensus-building as a means of consolidating social cohesion and citizen participation. The lessons learned will help enlighten public policies and facilitate implementation on a larger scale.

19. Within this integrated approach, efforts will be made, especially at the local level, to promote initiatives that can be adapted to sustainable production capacities by: (a) strengthening the institutional framework governing sustainable development; (b) conserving natural resources, optimizing energy resources, and fostering low-carbon-emissions development; and (c) encouraging participation and a culture of environmental stewardship.

Inclusive and effective democratic governance

20. Policies and capacities to foster more accountable, open and effective governance: the programme seeks to reinforce gains from the transition and the provisions of the new Constitution by consolidating the rule of law and democratic institutions. It strives, through a complementary approach, to strengthen the capacity of institutions to fully carry out the tasks entrusted to them and that of civil society to monitor them. In so doing, the programme will help promote social accountability mechanisms and citizen oversight of government, by insisting on the need to take citizens, especially women, youth and the disadvantaged, into account as the ultimate beneficiaries of the reforms and the protagonists of the transformation process. In addition, the programme will contribute to reform of the State and enhance its ability to provide services that live up to citizens' expectations, through more effective and transparent administration and accountability. To that end, it will support the formulation and implementation of a national decentralization strategy and contribute to implementation of an effective local governance system in which development priorities are set by consensus.

Resilience-building

21. Despite progress made, the transition is still confronted with a difficult socioeconomic and security environment that fuels political and social polarization and translates into recurrent crises capable of jeopardizing the gains made so far. The emergence of a proactive civil society and of actors more prone to dialogue has nevertheless managed to maintain a national consensus and demonstrates the country's resilience to instability hazards, which the programme will strengthen. The emphasis on sustainable paths to development – including at local level – will also play an important part in strengthening social cohesion and community resilience.

22. Resilience to natural disaster hazards will also be supported by: (a) climate change adaptation and mitigation; and (b) enhancement of national and local capacities for disaster risk prevention, management and reduction.

23. The programme aims to contribute to national capacity-building and to support the sharing of experience and sound practices through a South-South and triangular cooperation strategy capitalizing in particular on lessons learned during the Tunisian transition process. Putting in place partnerships and activity strategies based on shared priorities will also be of paramount importance, both within the United Nations system and with traditional and other (emerging nation, civil society, foundation, private sector) donors and creditors. To achieve that, the programme will support the systematization of lesson learned in key areas, keep an inventory of the expertise available, and activate exchanges with Arab countries and the rest of the world.

III. Programme and risk management

24. Most of the activities planned will be conducted in accordance with national execution practices, with the goal of maintaining substantial government co-financing. Drawing on UNDP capacities and comparative advantages, the programme will be implemented in line with results-based management and the harmonized approach to cash transfer principles.

25. The principal risks to proper programme execution have to do with the volatility of the sociopolitical and security situation at both the national and the regional situation; the downturn in the global economy; the reluctance of actors to undertake reforms; the ongoing shortage of human and financial resources; and low financial execution capacity. Specially tailored corrective measures, such as the strengthening of financial management will be developed. The country office will take advantage of the Programme Management Support Unit established in 2013 to mitigate these risks and will, if need be, resort to direct execution and accelerated processing mechanisms. Monitoring and evaluation, knowledge management, and communication functions will be strengthened to facilitate assessment of outcomes and their impact. These factors will also facilitate the mobilization of additional resources.

26. This paper highlights the UNDP contribution to the achievement of national outcomes and provides the Executive Board with reference material with respect to accountability for the alignment of outcomes with the resources allocated. The responsibilities of managers at national, regional, and headquarters levels in respect of country programmes are described in operational and programmatic policies and procedures as well as in the organization's internal control framework.

IV. Monitoring and evaluation

27. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs will install a steering committee to ensure annual monitoring of programme implementation, in line with UDAF monitoring and evaluation procedures. UNDP will attach particular importance to this aspect so as to ensure enhanced supervision and coordination of the programme, efficient monitoring of projects and evaluation of their impact. During project formulation, there will be extensive consultations with partners and beneficiaries with a view to establishing best programme and risks management strategies. All these elements will feed into a strategy for generating and making the most of knowledge of human development processes capable of triggering innovation and change.

28. The activities envisaged are directly related to UNDAF expected outcomes. A study involving the national counterpart, the beneficiaries and academic and research institutions will be conducted in 2017, for a mid-term evaluation of results and, if need be, a reorientation of the strategies pursued. During the 2015-2019 cycle a report on progress achieved by the United Nations system will be prepared and systematic project evaluations will be conducted.

29. The Tunisian Government and SNU agree to adopt a sensitive and flexible approach to managing the implementation of the UNDAF and the agencies' country programmes in light of Tunisia's special circumstances. Cooperation with AfDB, ESCWA, UNICEF and UNFPA will help develop the capacity of statistics institutions to gather and analyse data needed for a better grasp, especially at a disaggregated level, of poverty and vulnerability. Periodic reports, such as those drawn up in connection with the post-2015 sustainable development framework (SDGs), will make it possible to take advantage of those data.
