Expressing its concern that new information and communications technologies make it possible for criminals to construct false identities that enable their abuse and/or exploitation of children, for example, through grooming and online exploitation,

Stressing that criminal organizations use the Internet, including social networks and hosting platforms, to conduct criminal activities such as recruiting victims, especially children, trafficking in persons for the purpose of sexual exploitation, and managing their criminal activities,

Affirming its belief in the importance of international cooperation and coordination in effectively combating the criminal misuse of new information and communications technologies for the purpose of abusing and/or exploiting children,

1. Encourages Member States to strengthen their efforts to protect children from all forms of trafficking and exploitation, including exploitation by means of information and communications technologies;

2. Also encourages Member States to implement measures to prevent children from being exposed to the risk of trafficking in persons in spaces created on the Internet and to assist them by providing information, protection and reintegration programmes in case of abuse and exploitation, and welcomes the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime Education for Justice initiative, which is an innovative and comprehensive educational approach designed to support the integration of crime prevention and other aspects of the rule of law into all levels of education in order to facilitate and promote teaching and research on issues related to the Office’s mandated areas, including cybercrime, trafficking in persons and the smuggling of migrants;

3. Further encourages Member States to adopt legislation that compels Internet service providers to report child sexual abuse images and materials to the relevant authorities, block websites containing child sexual abuse images and cooperate with law enforcement authorities in the investigation and prosecution of the offenders responsible;

4. Urges Members States to establish national coordinating offices to combat trafficking in persons, calls for close international and regional cooperation between such national offices, which may include exchanges of good practices and tools to detect online activities related to trafficking in persons, and invites the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime to assist States in establishing such networks;

5. Invites Member States to establish national referral mechanisms that include victim assistance and protection in investigative and prosecution proceedings, and notes that State actors should consider coordinating their efforts with civil society organizations in order to deliver guidance to first responders to identify and protect victims of trafficking in persons and also consider establishing a system to refer such victims to specialized services offering shelter, protection and assistance in accordance with a human rights-based approach;

6. Urges Member States to enhance training on information and communications technologies for all relevant officials, as appropriate, in order to combat all forms of child trafficking;
