Chapter I

Matters calling for action by the Economic and Social Council or brought to its attention

A. Draft decisions for adoption by the Council

1. The United Nations Forum on Forests recommends to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of the following draft decisions:

Draft decision I

Ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests on the occasion of the launch of the International Year of Forests

The Economic and Social Council takes note of the following ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests and decides to transmit it to the General Assembly for its endorsement, as a contribution of the Forum to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development, to be held in May 2012 in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil:

Ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests on the occasion of the launch of the International Year of Forests

1. We, the Ministers gathered at the high-level segment of the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests and for the launch of the International Year of Forests, 2011, underscore that forests are an integral part of the global environment and human well-being, providing multiple goods and services essential for people worldwide and crucial for sustainable development and the achievement of the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals.
2. We welcome the United Nations designation of 2011 as the International Year of Forests as a landmark opportunity to raise awareness and strengthen political commitment and action worldwide, this year and in the years to come, to achieve sustainable forest management.
3. We stress the vital role and significant contribution of all types of forests and trees in addressing the complex and interconnected global challenges related to economic and social development, poverty eradication, environmental sustainability, food security and agriculture, energy, water, mitigation of and adaptation to climate change, combating desertification and land degradation, conservation of biodiversity, watershed protection and disaster risk reduction.
4. We recognize that 1.6 billion people — nearly one quarter of the world's population — depend on forests for subsistence, livelihood, employment and income generation, and stress the crucial role of local people, including women, and local and indigenous communities in achieving sustainable forest management.
5. We welcome the efforts undertaken by countries in advancing sustainable forest management at all levels but are deeply concerned that 13 million hectares of forest continue to be lost each year and underscore the need to reverse this trend.

6. We reaffirm the importance of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 62/98 of 17 December 2007 as an integrated framework for national action and international cooperation to promote implementation of sustainable forest management and achieve the four shared global objectives on forests contained therein.

7. We welcome new and emerging forest-related financing initiatives and encourage the promotion of synergies between climate change and sustainable forest management activities, noting that sustainable forest management encompasses a comprehensive approach to forest values.

8. We recognize that the United Nations Forum on Forests, with its universal membership and comprehensive mandate, plays a vital role in addressing forest-related issues in a holistic and integrated manner and promoting international policy coordination and cooperation to achieve sustainable forest management. We invite the Collaborative Partnership on Forests to continue its support to the Forum and encourage stakeholders to remain actively engaged in the work of the Forum.

9. Bearing in mind the foregoing, we commit to:

(a) Improving the livelihoods of people and communities, in particular in developing countries and countries with economies in transition, by creating the conditions needed for them to sustainably manage forests, including through strengthening cooperation in the areas of finance, trade, transfer of environmentally sound technologies, capacity-building and governance, as well as by promoting secure land tenure, participatory decision-making and benefit-sharing, in accordance with national legislation, policies and priorities;

(b) Developing and implementing cross-sectoral and multi-institutional policies, mechanisms and actions at all levels, which integrate sustainable forest management into development plans and programmes;

(c) Accelerating implementation of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests and efforts towards achievement of the four shared global objectives on forests contained therein, through national, regional and international actions and cooperation;

(d) Taking a meaningful decision on forest financing at the tenth session of the Forum in 2013, as envisaged in the resolution of the special session of the ninth session of the Forum;

(e) Undertaking immediate steps towards implementing the forest-related outcomes of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the Millennium Development Goals agreed in September 2010;

(f) Working with the governing bodies of member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests, in particular the three Rio Conventions, to integrate, as appropriate, the sustainable management of all types of forests into their strategies and programmes and promote coherence and synergies as related to forests;

(g) Contributing substantively to the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development in 2012 and its preparatory process by highlighting the economic, social and environmental benefits of forests to people and the contributions of sustainable forest management to the themes and objectives of the Conference.

10. We invite the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development to consider the present declaration as the contribution of the United Nations Forum on Forests to the Conference.

11. We agree to meet again at the eleventh session of the Forum, in 2015, to review our progress in meeting these commitments, as well as the effectiveness of the international arrangement on forests.

Reaffirming its commitment to the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development,⁵ including that States have, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the principles of international law, the sovereign rights to exploit their own resources pursuant to their own environmental and development policies and the responsibility to ensure that activities within their jurisdiction or control do not cause damage to the environment of other States or of areas beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and to the common but differentiated responsibilities of countries, as set out in principle 7 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 62/98 of 17 December 2007, in which the Assembly adopted the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests,

Guidelines for country-led, organization-led, region-led and major group-led initiatives in support of the United Nations Forum on Forests

The Forum takes note of the following guidelines for country-led, organization-led, region-led and major group-led initiatives in support of the United Nations Forum on Forests:

I. Background

1. International expert meetings in support of the work of the United Nations Forum on Forests hosted by countries or others have made important and extremely significant contributions to the process. These initiatives are innovative and unique mechanisms of the intergovernmental forest policy process (the Intergovernmental Panel on Forests, the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests and the United Nations Forum on Forests) that have deepened knowledge of important issues concerning sustainable forest management and international cooperation in that regard. The usefulness of such initiatives is evident from the recognition they have received for their contributions in achieving consensus and from the increasing number of countries, organizations and major groups that have hosted such initiatives in recent years. In light of the experiences and lessons learned from initiatives led by countries, organizations, regions and major groups, these guidelines draw upon the previous guidelines contained in resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council, the United Nations Forum on Forests and the Intergovernmental Forum on Forests.

II. Guidelines for country-led, organization-led, region-led and major group-led initiatives

2. The overall purpose of any country-led, organization-led, region-led or major group-led initiative is to support the work of the United Nations Forum on Forests. Thus, countries may wish to consider the following guidelines when planning such initiatives:

(a) These initiatives should be related to the multi-year programme of work and cross-cutting issues of the United Nations Forum on Forests, as well as emerging issues. They can also be held to advance the implementation of previous outcomes of the Forum;

(b) These initiatives should be informal in nature, transparent, participatory, strive for balanced representation, including gender, and be open to participation by all member States of the Forum, members of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests, representatives of major groups, as well as other interested stakeholders;

(c) Proponents of an initiative should bring their interest in convening an initiative to the attention of the Bureau and the secretariat of the Forum as soon as possible, in writing, stating the objectives of the initiative, its relevance to the work of the Forum, the proposed venue and date, as well as the estimated participation;

(d) The secretariat of the United Nations Forum on Forests will participate in the committee established to guide the initiative;

(e) The cost of such initiatives will be borne by the hosts, donors or provided from other sources. Neither the regular United Nations budget nor the United Nations Forum on Forests Trust Fund will cover the cost of such initiatives;

(f) The Bureau member from the region in which the initiative is being held should be invited to attend;

(g) The travel and expenses of one member of the United Nations Forum on Forests secretariat will be covered by the initiative;

(h) Following an initiative, the organizers should submit a report for presentation to the Secretary-General which will be placed on the website of the United Nations Forum on Forests;

(i) In the interest of registering and acknowledging the contribution of all those involved in the initiative, including in terms of their financial support, the proponents of the initiative may wish to include this information in the report to be submitted to the Secretary-General;

(j) Countries, organizations, regions and major groups are invited to consider these guidelines that will apply to the initiatives announced after the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests.

Summary by the Chair of the multi-stakeholder dialogue

1. The United Nations Forum on Forests considered agenda item 9 at its 5th meeting, on 26 January 2011. For its consideration of the item, the Forum had before it the following documents:

- (a) Note by the Secretariat on multi-stakeholder dialogue (E/CN.18/2011/9);
- (b) Discussion paper on social development and indigenous and other local and forest-dependent communities, including forest land tenure (E/CN.18/2011/9/Add.1);
- (c) Discussion paper on forests and culture (E/CN.18/2011/9/Add.2);
- (d) Discussion paper on the Community Forestry Programme in Nepal: an example of excellence in community-based forest management (E/CN.18/2011/9/Add.3).

2. A statement was made by the Director of the secretariat of the United Nations Forum on Forests. Representatives from the major groups, namely women, the scientific and technological community and farmers and small forest landowners, prepared and presented three joint papers on the overall theme of the ninth session of the Forum. At the same meeting, the representative of the non-governmental organizations presented the results of the major groups-led initiative held in July 2010 in Accra, on intensifying the involvement of major groups in the implementation of Forum decisions and a major group two-year programme on intensifying the engagement of major groups in the work of the Forum.

Interactive discussion among Member States, major groups and members of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests

3. The Forum held an interactive discussion among Member States, major groups and members of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests (CPF) at its 5th meeting, on 26 January 2011. An opening statement was made by the Executive Director of the International Union of Forest Research Organizations, who moderated the interactive discussion.

4. At the same meeting, presentations were made by the representatives of the following major groups: women; the scientific and technological community; children and youth; non-governmental organizations; indigenous peoples; and farmers and small forest landowners, as well as by the representatives of Nepal, Suriname, Austria, Argentina (on behalf of the Group of 77 and China), China, Papua New Guinea, Morocco, Brazil, Ghana and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

5. “Forests for people”, the theme of the ninth session of the Forum, is a quite timely and relevant topic, as deforestation continues at an alarming rate and the social dimension of forests and forestry continue to be neglected.

6. There was a general understanding that continuing to overlook the social aspects of forests was a major factor in the global trend of forest loss. Similarly, unclear and insecure tenure rights for marginalized forest communities, including indigenous peoples and women, are considered as contributing factors to the lack of long-term commitment to sustainable forest management.

7. It was pointed out that social development was a prerequisite for sustainable forest management. The key methods for reversing the global trend of forest loss included empowerment of women as decision makers, strengthening the role of associations to facilitate the sharing of experiences and increasing bargaining power with government institutions, promoting sustainable agriculture, protecting the rights of marginalized and poor people, including youth, and encouraging their unique perspectives on sustainable forest management.

8. Around 1.6 billion people depend on forests for their subsistence and livelihoods and in Africa alone, more than 5 million hectares of forest is lost every year. In Africa, Asia and Latin America, an estimated 80 per cent of the population depend on medicinal plants and associated traditional knowledge for their primary health-care needs and around half the population of the industrialized world uses natural remedies. Traditional knowledge medical practices contribute to the achievement of Millennium Development Goals 1 to 7. Cultural practices passed on from generation to generation have played a vital role in managing forests, conserving biodiversity and maintaining livelihoods and health care, and are critical for climate change adaptation. Traditional knowledge or “ethno-forestry” traditional practices conform to the standards of the Montreal Process criteria and indicators for sustainable forest management, namely: (a) conservation of biological diversity; (b) maintenance of productive capacity of forest ecosystems; (c) maintenance of forest ecosystem health and vitality; (d) conservation and maintenance of soil and water resources; (e) maintenance of forest contribution to global carbon cycles; and (f) maintenance and enhancement of long-term multiple socio-economic benefits to meet the needs of societies.

9. During the dialogue, a successful national network of community-based forest management programmes in Nepal (FECOFUN), established in 1995, was highlighted. Prior to the establishment of FECOFUN, Nepal had experienced severe forest degradation, having lost more than 2.2 million acres of forest area. By implementing community-based forest management, Nepal changed its policy landscape, becoming a pioneer of community forest management. Nepal forests and forest-dependent communities were still faced with challenges including from climate change. Efforts aimed at securing land tenure and rights, capacity-building, support for networking, climate justice, technology transfer, access to markets and local control were essential for successful community-based forest management, a key factor in climate change mitigation.

10. It was noted that the policy recommendations that had come out of the major group-led initiative included the need to address issues associated with equity, such as access, rights, land and resource tenure and benefit-sharing. Forest-dependent peoples must have reliable access to forest resources and a role in decision-making on the use and benefits of resources.

11. Among the conclusions of the dialogue was the increased need for collaboration between Governments, CPF and other entities in forming a capacity-building framework, the provision of secure tenure rights for local communities, Government recognition of the rights and roles of communities, access to benefits (education, information and markets) and meaningful participation in decision-making and management.

12. It was also stated that traditional knowledge should be documented in close partnership with holders and users, encouraging the use of appropriate best practices. The knowledge should be mainstreamed into national forest plans and programmes, as well as in the primary and secondary education curriculum with the involvement of all relevant stakeholders. In concert with such measures, the scientific community should respect traditional knowledge, benefit from and provide assistance to preserve such knowledge. In addition, an equitable benefit-sharing regime should be developed, including a legal system that would require the disclosure of the sources of genetic resources in order to prevent attempts to patent traditional knowledge and curb “biopiracy”.

13. The multi-stakeholder dialogue concluded with a greater appreciation of the range of work undertaken by the major groups in the Forum and a positive outlook for future endeavours.

Summaries by the Chairs of the high-level round tables

A. Round table 1: Forests for people

1. The high-level round table on Forests for people (round table 1) of the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests was held on 2 February 2011 during its high-level ministerial segment. The round table was chaired by Ingwald Gschwandt, Vice-Chair of the Forum, and moderated by Mohamed El-Ashry, Senior Fellow of the United Nations Foundation and former Chair and Chief Executive Officer of the Global Environment Facility (GEF). During this round table, ministers and high officials of the following countries made statements: Croatia, Norway, Turkey, Cameroon, Austria, Thailand, Zambia, Philippines, Peru, Ghana, China, Senegal, Mongolia, Angola, Romania, United States of America, Morocco, Hungary, Lesotho, Central African Republic, India, Poland, Russian Federation, Czech Republic, Israel, Mauritania, Ukraine, Gabon, Indonesia, Botswana, Ecuador, Costa Rica, Eritrea, Afghanistan, Italy, Nepal and Jamaica.

2. The discussions at this round table were focused on the intertwined relationship between people and forests. Participants highlighted the multiple functions and contributions of forests to human well-being, environmental stability and economic development, noting that forests not only provide goods and services, but are also sources of folklore and spirituality and have deep roots in different cultures and religions. Member States emphasized that targeted policies were needed at the local, national, regional and international levels to sustainably manage forests. In this respect, good forest governance, tenure security, local participation, cross-sectoral and landscape-level policy frameworks, as well as increased funding and political commitment, were considered of high importance.

3. Forests play a vital role in preserving ecosystems and biological diversity, as well as in combating climate change and reducing risks from natural disasters. Concerns were expressed over deforestation, illegal logging, transboundary movement of illegal forest products, desertification, recurring droughts and changing forest land to agricultural land, especially in recent years. Meanwhile some countries indicated that recent policies enacted to protect and promote forest restoration efforts have resulted in improved environmental conditions — such as erosion control — and have also led to increased employment. Forests are also crucial for improving livelihoods, reducing poverty and promoting sustainable development, which was underscored by many countries. Forests offer multiple services, including timber and non-timber forest products, and are the main sources of food, medicine and raw materials for building and weaving and for employment generation.

4. The International Year of Forests was widely considered a major opportunity to increase awareness among the general public of the role of people as a key vehicle to protect the world's forests. To further promote a people-centred approach to forests, many countries supported the work of the Forum in exploring intersectoral linkages between forests, water, agriculture, land management and energy. Countries also emphasized that a comprehensive approach on forests is needed to reconcile short-term needs with long-term policy and economic interests. The involvement of a wide range of stakeholders in the development of national forest programmes and model forests was also noted as an important factor to promote forests for people.

5. Limited financial and technical capacity, lack of data on forest resources, and difficulties in disseminating information to rural communities on sustainable forest management practices were highlighted as major impediments for realizing the full potential of forests. Countries recognized the significance of the existing collaboration among countries on these matters. However, many countries called for increased funding cooperation, including through establishing a global forest fund, to provide predictable and reliable funding for forests.

6. Participants underscored the need for advancing implementation of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests, and the achievement of the global objectives on forests. Many countries stressed that the four global objectives on forests were set to address people's needs.

B. Round table 2: Finance for forest-dependent communities

7. Round table 2, held on 2 February 2011 during the high-level ministerial segment of the ninth session of the Forum, focused on finance for forest-dependent people. It was chaired by Bureau member Ndiawar Dieng and moderated by Ana Maria Sampaio Fernandes, Ambassador of Brazil in Nairobi. During the round table, ministers and high officials of the following countries and international organization made statements: Plurinational State of Bolivia, Botswana, Central African Republic, Colombia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Guatemala, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Nepal, United States, Paraguay, Sudan and International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN).

8. Discussions highlighted the fact that the contribution of forests to rural livelihoods is estimated at 25 to 40 per cent of household income. But because forests are significantly undervalued, laws and regulations often prohibit forest-dependent people from accessing forest resources, and public spending on community forestry remains low.

9. Several participants noted that forest-dependent peoples, who represent a significant proportion of the population in many developing countries, face various barriers in implementing sustainable forest management, ranging from the lack of clear and secure land tenure and use rights arrangements, as well as restricted access to information and participation in decision-making processes. Ensuring sustained sources of finance was another challenge highlighted, together with limited capacity-building and organizational training, as well as technical training for forest management. Emphasis was also put on the importance of recognizing all the functions of forests, including the social and cultural values of local and indigenous communities.

10. Several participants highlighted the fact that in medium and high forest cover countries, forests are the basis for specific markets for timber and non-timber forest products. They explained that forests are a major source of livelihoods for millions of people living in and around forests. However, because many forest-dependent communities are isolated and their economies are informal, they need assistance in developing products and gaining access to markets. In this regard, participants noted that in designing financing schemes to assist forest-dependent communities, the informal economy and the knowledge and skills of local communities, including the non-cash values of the contribution made by forests to livelihoods, should be recognized. These and other types of financing, such as benefit distribution mechanisms, need to be equitable and involve all stakeholders, including the private sector where relevant, to support sustainable forest management activities with local communities, for example through their corporate social responsibility programmes.

11. Participants also highlighted the need for budget allocations at the national level to recognize the role of forests. While many stressed the need for funds to sustainably manage natural forests, they also noted that funding for reforestation and plantation projects was much easier to secure. A large number of national financing initiatives were mentioned, such as funds in Botswana to promote community-based natural resource management and small forest enterprises, as well as a new taxation system in the Central African Republic and the Democratic Republic of the Congo to secure Government revenue from logging operations. In both countries, there is also a system to redistribute part of this revenue to local communities. However, financing for forest communities and sustainable forest management, as noted by many participants, requires greater integration into national forest plans and national development plans.

12. Participants also addressed the international level, specifically the creation of multilateral funds, reflecting the global benefits that forests provide, for instance in terms of limiting the effects of climate change. Many pointed to existing funds, including those of the GEF, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the National Forest Programme Facility, and funding initiatives at the regional level. For example, REDD+ was viewed as a useful source of financing for local communities, which to an extent addresses cross-sectoral issues related to sustainable forest management. However, participants cautioned that communities could face risks from REDD+ (Reducing Emissions from Deforestation and Forest Degradation), as the focus of the mechanism remains on carbon stocks rather than on the rights and livelihoods of local communities. Therefore, aside from these efforts, participants highlighted the need for existing funds to be complemented by other sources of financing, capacity-building and technology transfer addressing forests in their entirety. In this context, many stated the need for a predictable source of funding for forests from the international community and that a global forest fund would address this very issue.

C. Round table 3: Forests-plus: a cross-sectoral and cross-institutional approach

13. Round table 3, "Forests-plus: a cross-sectoral and cross-institutional approach", held on 3 February 2011 during the high-level ministerial segment of the ninth session of the Forum, focused on the interlinkages and interactions of forests with forces outside the forest sector. The round table was chaired and moderated by Zainol Rahim Zainuddin, High Commissioner of Malaysia to Kenya. The following countries and organizations made statements during the event: Namibia, France, Mexico, Australia, Netherlands, Chad, Papua New Guinea (on behalf of Fiji, Samoa and Solomon Islands), International Union of Forest Research Organizations (IUFRO) and Economic Commission for Europe.

14. Discussions focused on sharing experiences and lessons learned on the realities of sustainable forest management and forest policy in the context of cross-sectoral and cross-institutional complexities. Many participants suggested areas for possible intersectoral cooperation. In this regard, several participants stressed the need to better understand the interlinkages and interactions between sustainable forest management and rapidly evolving policies and measures affecting climate change mitigation and adaptation, energy, agriculture and water. Participants also acknowledged the significance of forests in addressing economic, environmental and social challenges facing people, and their critical role for food security, sustainable livelihoods and poverty eradication.

15. At the operational level, several representatives highlighted challenges and opportunities for achieving sustainable forest management from forces outside the realm of the forest sector. Among these, some representatives noted actions to curb cases of illegal harvesting of forest resources and to restrict the importation of illegally logged timber, respectively, through close work with community-based forest management projects and capacity-building programmes. Ongoing efforts to implement Forest Law Enforcement and Governance (FLEG) initiatives were also highlighted. For many small island developing States, concerns also focused on climate change-induced consequences. The experiences of other countries expressed during the round table to overcome intersectoral challenges included programmes encompassing a full range of sustainable forest management activities, inter alia, reforestation activities, a forest fund mechanism, distribution of incentives at the community level and legal reforms to recognize the land ownership of communities. Participants also noted the need to address fragmented approaches to forests at the policy and institutional level, bearing in mind that the main threats and impacts to forests lie outside the forest sector. In this regard, many participants welcomed the notion of “forests-plus” as an approach embracing the intersectoral and inter-institutional complexity of forests. Moreover, benefits derived from a cross-sectoral approach, namely in terms of increased budgets for forests, as well as programmatic synergies and higher values attached to forests and their conservation, were noted. At the same time, some participants referred to coordination through policy learning and underlined the need for approaching forest-related issues, not only cross-sectorally, but also at different levels of government — municipal, state and national — and involving non-governmental organizations, communities and other key stakeholders.

D. Round table 4: Forests and Rio+20

16. The high-level round table on “Forests and Rio+20” was held during the high-level ministerial segment of the ninth session of the United Nations Forum on Forests, on 3 February 2011. The discussions for the round table were focused on the contributions of forests to the themes and objectives of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20), which will take place in 2012 in Brazil. This round table was chaired by Ingwald Gschwandt, Vice-Chair of the Forum, and moderated by Daniel Reifsnyder, Deputy Assistant Secretary, United States Department of State. Sha Zukang, Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs and Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20), made initial remarks and provided a very useful context for Member States during the discussion. The round table included statements from the Congo, the Islamic Republic of Iran, Finland, the Republic of Korea, Malaysia, Canada, Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Estonia, Switzerland, Sweden, Gabon, Togo, Egypt, Liechtenstein, Chile, Costa Rica, Slovakia, Kazakhstan, Algeria, Japan, Viet Nam, Nicaragua, Kenya, Poland, Senegal, China and Guyana.

17. Mr. Sha emphasized the importance for the round table of going beyond the environmental aspects of sustainable forest management and elaborating on how forests can contribute to poverty eradication, to the promotion of sustainable patterns of production and consumption and to discussion and developments on climate change. He also raised challenging questions for the participants to address, such as whether a timeline for the achievement of the four global objectives on forests should be aligned with the timeline for the achievement of the Millennium Development Goals; how the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests could be integrated at the national, regional and international levels; and what if any implications would there be for the instrument if REDD+ became a legally binding framework.

18. Many participants stated that the concept of a green economy needed further clarification, with some saying that there was still no consensus on what a green economy meant and others linking it to the (low/non-) use of carbon in the economy and to “green growth”. It was mentioned that there was no such thing as “one size fits all”, the green economy needed to be defined in a national context and should be placed in the context of sustainable development and not as a replacement for it. Despite the perception of a lack of agreement on the definition for the concept, countries stressed that Rio+20 provided the world with an excellent opportunity to raise the profile of forests and demonstrated the contribution of forests to a green economy through jobs and income generation, including gender equality; food security (agroforestry in particular was mentioned); renewable green energy; green technologies; ecosystem services and REDD+; repositories of biodiversity; reuse, recycling and reduction of waste from forest industries; green construction; green timber products; and rehabilitation of degraded forests and reforestation.

19. A number of countries mentioned good governance, empowered stakeholders, clear and secure land tenure, tangible and equitable benefit-sharing, and meaningful public participation as some of the essential conditions in achieving sustainable forest management and for forests to contribute to a green economy. The others would be the creation of an enabling environment for long-term investment in sustainable forest management, valuation of forest resources, access to markets for forest products, and capacity-building, transfer of environmentally sound technologies and financial cooperation.

20. On the second theme of the Rio+20 Conference, the institutional framework for sustainable development, a number of countries mentioned that Rio+20 should take stock of the progress on forests since 1992, as well as the efforts of countries in implementing the forest instrument and its four global objectives on forests. In the progress achieved, many participants outlined national efforts to promote sustainable forest management, including through massive reforestation and land restoration efforts, payments for ecosystem services schemes and inclusion of local and marginalized communities in forest management, planning and/or benefit-sharing. Some participants also noted the unique position of the Forum for advancing the role of forests in sustainable development and a green economy at the Rio+20 Conference. In this context, it was proposed that the ministerial declaration of the ninth session of the Forum, the forest instrument and its global objectives on forests should be forwarded to the Rio+20 Conference as input from the Forum. Some countries also highlighted the need for a global forest fund, and emphasized that adequate financial and technical resources would be required in view of the question on a legally binding agreement. Others mentioned that a message for a global legally binding agreement on all types of forests would be needed. On the desired outcomes of Rio+20, some participants expressed their expectation for greater references to forests than at the 1992 summit. Additional suggestions included references to the role of youth in maintaining healthy forests and improving forest ecosystems, as well as an enhanced framework for cooperation that recognizes national and regional realities in sustainable forest management.

E. High-level dialogue with the heads of the member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests

21. A high-level dialogue with the heads of the 14 member organizations of the Collaborative Partnership on Forests (CPF) took place on 3 February. The Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs moderated the session, introducing three themes of crucial importance to all CPF members: (a) promoting the International Year of Forests, 2011 (Forests 2011); (b) forest finance and the implementation of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests and achievement of the global objectives on forests; and (c) forests and Rio+20.

22. Eduardo Rojas-Briales, Assistant Director-General of Forestry, FAO, and Chair of CPF, asserted that Forests 2011 had generated momentum for all forest programmes, creating opportunities, synergies and networks to shape operating environments and the priorities of organizations. He underscored the awareness-raising capacity of Forests, 2011, and stated that continued success would require strengthened, cross-sectoral communication and collaboration, as well as efforts to reach beyond CPF constituencies. He reiterated the need for an integrated approach, in particular on forest financing, as well as the responsibility of CPF to show the connections between sustainable forest management and a green economy.

23. Mr. Sha proceeded by introducing the panel of CPF speakers and inviting them to address questions related to the three themes introduced above.

Theme 1: Promoting the International Year of Forests, 2011

24. Helen Clark, Administrator, UNDP, noted that sustainable forest management went hand-in-hand with sustainable human development. She outlined UNDP efforts to develop country capacities through programmes such as REDD, as well as their ongoing collaboration with the small grants programme of GEF, supporting indigenous and community-led forest conservation activities. She also underscored the continued commitment of UNDP to engage in and support the work of the Forum.

25. Julia Marton-LeFèvre, Director General of IUCN, expressed confidence in the potential of Forest 2011 to raise public awareness on forest issues. She noted IUCN plans during 2011, among them activities to promote forests through a designated web portal; social networking forums; analysis and statistics focused on the relationship between forests and national markets; high-level forest-related events; and the dissemination of messages on how the benefits from forests and trees extend well beyond forests themselves. IUCN is also reaching out to new partners, including youth and filmmakers.

26. Frances Seymour, Director General of the Center for International Forestry Research, stated that her organization was creating partnerships with policymakers and other organizations to ensure that their collaborative research programme on forests, trees and agroforestry aligns with key policy needs, as well as those of local communities. A number of events will be convened throughout the year, including on governance and dryland forests, to engage new constituencies and raise awareness of forest scientific issues. The event Forest Day 5, to be held in December 2011 in Durban, South Africa, was highlighted.

27. Dennis Garrity of the World Agroforestry Centre discussed the importance of agroforestry, especially in creating employment opportunities and increasing agricultural output. He called for greater recognition of agroforestry in sustainable landscape management, including the use of these tools for decreasing poverty and combating climate change. Cross-sectoral promotion and implementation of agroforestry was also highly encouraged.

28. Niels Koch, President, International Union of Forest Research Organizations, described the efforts of his organization to systematically expand activities at the science-policy interface. The IUFRO 2010-2014 strategy outlined six thematic areas: forests for people; climate change; forest biodiversity conservation; bioenergy; forests and water interactions; and resources for the future. He also mentioned activities in support of Forests 2011.

29. Jan McAlpine, Director, United Nations Forum on Forests secretariat, discussed the role of the secretariat in facilitating the coordination of CPF members, underscoring the success of collaboration among members especially when linked with the efforts of Member States. Ms. McAlpine also noted the work of the secretariat and CPF work in advancing the “360-degree role of forests”, highlighting the launch of the landscape restoration project in Rwanda as an example.

Theme 2: Forest finance and implementation of the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests and achievement of the global objectives on forests

30. Gustavo Fonseca, Director, Natural Resources, of GEF, underscored the continued efforts of CPF to effectively support the work of the Forum and called for building similar collaboration models within subgroups of CPF to help organizations access resources more efficiently. In this regard, he highlighted the creation of a programme to fund sustainable forest management and REDD+ projects. The commitment of the CPF to countries, particularly low forest cover countries and small island developing States, in supporting their national reporting needs and harmonizing forest-related information was also mentioned. On this topic, the partnership with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Forum secretariat on forest funding in low-forest cover countries and small island developing States, including the need to identify gaps and barriers to forest financing activities, was underscored. He also stated that GEF would continue to engage in the facilitative process of the Forum and in the work of the Open-ended Intergovernmental Ad Hoc Expert Group on Forest Financing.

31. Gerhard Dieterle, adviser at the World Bank, underscored the support of his organization for the non-legally binding instrument on all types of forests, further highlighting their portfolio approach to forest financing. He indicated, however, a risk for developing countries in that their existing institutional and development capacities would not be able to meet the portfolio requirements, and therein he identified a strong role for CPF. He expressed the World Bank's commitment to continue working proactively as a member of the CPF Advisory Group on Finance, and highlighted the need for greater collaboration at all levels in forest finance.

Theme 3: Forests and Rio+20

32. Luc Gnacadja, Executive Secretary of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification, indicated the importance of forest-related discussions to the parties to the Convention. He highlighted the fact that arid zones failed to attract adequate investment despite the importance of dryland forests in providing a buffer against drought and desertification, and called for more investment to prevent and reverse land degradation. Mr. Gnacadja called for CPF to move towards target-setting for Rio+20 and policies promoting payments for environmental services, especially for developing economies that are often land-based.

33. Ahmed Djoghla, Executive Secretary of the Convention on Biological Diversity, discussed the global partnership strategy and forest-related targets of the Nagoya Protocol, as well as the importance of translating those targets into national strategies and action plans before Rio+20. Mr. Djoghla called for strengthened partnerships between North and South, the private sector and Governments.

34. Eduardo Rojas-Briales, Assistant Director-General of Forestry, FAO, emphasized the importance of ensuring an enabling environment for forest policy discussions at multiple levels. Efforts to create a world evaluation system to assess the contributions of natural resources, especially in consideration of the size of informal economies with many non-cash transactions, were called for. He emphasized that forest financing should internalize the positive and negative externalities related to forests.

35. Emmanuel Ze Meka, Executive Director of the International Tropical Timber Organization, cautioned that there were far greater challenges in forest management compared to biodiversity and climate change. He expressed concern that negotiations resulted only in a non-legally binding instrument, as opposed to a legal agreement, and in the meantime the world's forests had continued to decline because of deforestation. He underscored the current opportunity to take stock of progress made on sustainable development, noting tangible progress with respect to a broad range of forest issues. While some countries have shown progress, others have been hampered by the lack of predictable forest-related financing and effective coordination and integration with local communities and other stakeholders. He underscored the need to address forest management in a holistic manner, and for stakeholders to redouble efforts to raise forest issues, highlighting emerging concepts such as the "green economy".

36. Ibrahim Thiaw, Director, Division of Environmental Policy Implementation, UNEP, highlighted the central role of forests in a "green economy" and the need for an institutional framework for sustainable development focusing on governance, especially land rights of rural communities and farmers. The challenge of putting together frameworks at the national scale and maintaining a public accounting system for services provided by forests was discussed. He stated that the regeneration of forests should not compete with the agricultural sector, which is often the case owing to the undervaluation of forest benefits in monetary terms. He proposed measuring forest governance in terms of protection, with CPF providing technical assistance.

37. Christiana Figueres, Executive Secretary of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, asserted via video message that CPF was an excellent forum for forest-related information-sharing among all members. She stressed the importance of keeping abreast of forest-related activities and issues, since all CPF members faced similar issues.
