Report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of a special tribunal for Lebanon

I. Introduction

1. In my report to the Security Council pursuant to paragraph 6 of its resolution 1644 (2005) (S/2006/176), I set out at the Council's request the nature and scope of the international assistance needed to try before a tribunal of an international character those responsible for the terrorist bombing that killed former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri and others. In so doing, I put forward the general principles of a tribunal of an international character, its personal and subject matter jurisdiction, composition, location and the question of financing, on the basis of consultations between the United Nations Secretariat and the Lebanese authorities.

2. By resolution 1664 (2006), the Security Council endorsed the report and requested me to negotiate an agreement with the Government of Lebanon aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice, taking into account the recommendations of my report and the views that have been expressed by Council members. The Council also requested me to submit for its consideration a report on the implementation of the resolution, in particular on the draft agreement negotiated with the Government of Lebanon, including options for a funding mechanism appropriate to ensuring the continued and effective functioning of the tribunal.

3. Following initial consultations with the Lebanese authorities in Beirut on 26 and 27 January 2006 and with two senior Lebanese judges from 24 to 28 February at United Nations Headquarters in New York, negotiations on the legal framework for the establishment of the special tribunal for Lebanon on the basis of the Security Council's mandate proceeded at the expert level between members of the Office of Legal Affairs of the Secretariat and the Government of Lebanon, represented by the Lebanese judges. The two delegations met between 31 May and 1 June 2006 at Headquarters and between 3 and 7 July 2006 in The Hague. In this latest round of negotiations the two delegations benefited from the advice and wealth of knowledge and experience of two former Presidents of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. On 6 September, the Legal Counsel travelled to Beirut and presented the initial draft agreement and statute to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Justice of Lebanon for their consideration.

4. Requested by the Security Council in its resolution 1664 (2006) to take account of the views that have been expressed by Council members, the Secretariat has, in the course of negotiations, taken into account the views expressed by interested members of the Council on the progress of the negotiations and the principles of the legal framework for the establishment of the special tribunal. These consultations have in many ways shaped the legal choices made in the tribunal's founding instruments.

5. The present report analyses the main features of the statute of the special tribunal and the agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon. It examines the legal nature and specificities of the tribunal, its temporal, personal and subject matter jurisdiction, its organizational structure and composition, the conduct of the trial process, the location of the seat, the funding mechanism and cooperation with third States.

II. The legal nature and specificities of the special tribunal

6. The legal basis for the establishment of the special tribunal is an agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon, to which the statute of the tribunal is attached (see annex I). As a treaty-based organ, the special tribunal is neither a subsidiary organ of the United Nations, nor is it a part of the Lebanese court system.

7. The Security Council mandated the Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice. Although the features of such an international character were not specified, the constitutive instruments of the special tribunal in both form and substance evidence its international character. The legal basis for the establishment of the special tribunal is an international agreement between the United Nations and a Member State; its composition is mixed with a substantial international component; its standards of justice, including principles of due process of law, are those applicable in all international or United Nations-based criminal jurisdictions; its rules of procedure and evidence are to be inspired, in part, by reference materials reflecting the highest standards of international criminal procedure; and its success may rely considerably on the cooperation of third States. While in all of these respects the special tribunal has international characteristics, its subject matter jurisdiction or the applicable law remain national in character, however.

8. The special tribunal for Lebanon is distinguished from other international criminal tribunals established or assisted by the United Nations in two respects: (a) in the conduct of the trial process, more elements of civil law are evident than of common law; and (b) the investigative process conducted by the International Independent Investigation Commission constitutes, in fact, the core nascent prosecutor's office.

9. With the exception of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia, the conduct of the trial process as reflected in the constituent instruments of all other United Nations-based or assisted tribunals has included more common law elements. The special tribunal for Lebanon is the first United Nations-assisted tribunal to combine substantial elements of both legal systems. The applicability of the Lebanese Code of Criminal Procedure as a guiding principle alongside other reference materials reflecting the highest standards of international criminal procedure (art. 28), the enhanced powers of the Tribunal to take measures to ensure expeditious hearing and prevent any action that may cause unreasonable delay (art. 21) and the introduction of trials in absentia (art. 22) are the most notable manifestations of civil law elements.

10. The establishment of the special tribunal for Lebanon will have been preceded by the Commission established by Security Council resolution 1595 (2005) to assist the Lebanese authorities in their investigation of all aspects of the terrorist attack that killed former Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri and others. In establishing the Commission first, the investigative process has, for all intents and purposes, begun. In so doing, it will have the effect of reducing the lifespan of the tribunal and increasing the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of its operation.

III. The jurisdiction of the special tribunal: temporal, personal and subject matter

A. Temporal jurisdiction

11. In its resolution 1664 (2006), the Security Council envisaged the prosecution of those responsible for the single terrorist bombing that killed former Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri and others on 14 February 2005. The Hariri assassination, however, was committed in a context of other attacks bearing the same or similar characteristics committed between 1 October 2004 and 12 December 2005. Extending the jurisdiction of the tribunal beyond the assassination of Rafiq Hariri to other attacks is not, strictly speaking, an extension of the temporal jurisdiction of the tribunal, but rather an extension of its jurisdiction to include, within a specified period, other attacks that the tribunal might find to be connected to the Hariri assassination and similar to it in nature and gravity. The list of such attacks is included in the third report of the Commission (S/2006/161, para. 55; attached to this report as annex II).

12. The reasons for the inclusion of these other attacks are threefold:

(a) As the investigation of the Commission has progressed, potential links have emerged between the assassination of Rafiq Hariri and other attacks;

(b) The expansion of the mandate of the Commission to provide technical assistance to the Lebanese authorities in respect of the 14 other attacks is an indication of interest on the part of the Security Council in judicial accountability beyond the Rafiq Hariri assassination;

(c) Singling out for prosecution one attack in a context of other similar attacks is bound to create a perception of selective justice.

1. Linkage among the attacks

13. Article 1 of the statute of the special tribunal for Lebanon (see annex I, attachment) provides as follows:

“The Special Tribunal shall have jurisdiction over persons responsible for the attack of 14 February 2005 resulting in the death of former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri and in the death or injury of other persons. If the Tribunal finds that other attacks that occurred in Lebanon between 1 October 2004 and 12 December 2005, or any later date decided by the Parties and with the consent of the Security Council, are connected in accordance with principles of criminal justice and are of a nature and gravity similar to the attack of 14 February 2005, it shall also have jurisdiction over persons responsible for such attacks. This connection includes but is not limited to a combination of the following elements: criminal intent (motive), the purpose behind the attacks, the nature of the victims targeted, the pattern of the attacks (modus operandi) and the perpetrators.”

14. In investigating the potential links between some or all of these attacks, the Commission has identified certain potential linkages, notably the mode of operation, or the general pattern of using explosive devices; the nature of the crime or the criminal intent underlying the attacks, namely, targeting politicians or influential journalists, as well as creating widespread fear and anxiety among elements of the population by targeting public locations, destabilizing the security situation and causing damage to infrastructure; and the identity of perpetrators, of at least some of the attacks.¹ In its fourth report, the Commission reached the preliminary conclusion that the 14 cases were not commissioned and executed by 14 disparate and unconnected persons or groups with an equal number of separate motives. Analytically, the cases can be linked in a number of different ways and from varying perspectives, notably their similarities in the modus operandi, and their possible intent.²

2. The expanded mandate of the Commission

15. The mandate of the Commission was originally limited to the investigation of all aspects of the terrorist attack of 14 February 2005 that killed former Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri and others (resolution 1595 (2005)). On 13 December 2005, a day after the assassination of Gebran Tueni, the Government of Lebanon requested the establishment of a tribunal of an international character and the expansion of the mandate of the Commission, or the establishment of another international investigation commission, to investigate the assassination attempts and assassinations and explosions that took place in Lebanon starting with the attempt on the life of Minister Marwan Hamadeh on 1 October 2004. In response to that request, the Security Council, in its resolution 1644 (2005), expanded the mandate of the Commission to include the provision of technical assistance as appropriate to the Lebanese authorities with regard to their investigations on the terrorist attacks perpetrated in Lebanon since 1 October 2004.

16. While the resolution expands the Commission’s mandate with respect to the other 14 attacks for the purpose of extending its technical assistance to the Lebanese authorities and not for the purpose of its own investigation, it is an indication

² Ibid., para. 83. In its fifth report, the Commission confirmed its preliminary conclusion regarding the interconnectivity between the 14 cases and stated that, as it was developing evidence that linked the cases into differing groupings, it was anticipated that further links between the cases might become evident upon further collection of information and evidence (S/2006/760, para. 67).

nonetheless that the Security Council is interested in judicial accountability for those responsible for those attacks as well.

3. A perception of fairness, impartiality and objectivity of the special tribunal

17. In establishing the temporal jurisdiction of any United Nations-based tribunal, the Organization strives to strike a balance between a temporal jurisdiction comprehensive enough to include the most serious crimes committed by those most responsible throughout the relevant period and a jurisdiction reasonably limited so as not to overburden the prosecutor's office and the tribunal as a whole. It is a balance struck, in fact, between fairness, objectivity and impartiality of the trial process, and its efficiency and cost-effectiveness.

18. In the present circumstances, singling out for prosecution the assassination of Rafiq Hariri, while disregarding a score of other connected attacks could cast a serious doubt on the objectivity and impartiality of the tribunal and lead to the perception of selective justice.

B. Personal jurisdiction of the special tribunal

19. In its resolution 1664 (2006), the Security Council did not prescribe the personal jurisdiction of the tribunal, although it was mindful of the demand of the Lebanese people that all those responsible for the terrorist bombing that killed former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri and others be identified and brought to justice.

20. Article 1 of the statute accordingly provides that the tribunal shall have jurisdiction "over persons" responsible for the crimes falling within its subject matter jurisdiction, whose modes of criminal responsibility are further elaborated upon in article 3. Within the all-inclusive definition of the personal jurisdiction of the tribunal, the prosecutor will be free to pursue her or his prosecutorial strategy and to determine the list of potential indictees according to the evidence before him or her.

C. Subject matter jurisdiction

21. Article 2 of the statute provides as follows:

"The following shall be applicable to the prosecution and punishment of the crimes referred to in article 1, subject to the provisions of this Statute:

"(a) The provisions of the Lebanese Criminal Code relating to the prosecution and punishment of acts of terrorism, crimes and offences against life and personal integrity, illicit associations and failure to report crimes and offences, including the rules regarding the material elements of a crime, criminal participation and conspiracy; and

“(b) Articles 6 and 7 of the Lebanese law of 11 January 1958 on ‘Increasing the penalties for sedition, civil war and interfaith struggle’.”³

22. While the Lebanese criminal law is the applicable law, its applicability is limited to the crimes and offences provided for in article 2 of the statute. It is also subject to the provisions of the statute and therefore to the exclusion of penalties (e.g. death penalty and forced labour) otherwise applicable under Lebanese law.

23. In keeping with the Security Council mandate requesting the Secretary-General to establish a tribunal of an international character and in the circumstances of Lebanon where a pattern of terrorist attacks seems to have emerged, it was considered whether to qualify the crimes as crimes against humanity and to define them, for the purpose of this statute, as murder or other inhumane acts of similar gravity causing great suffering or serious injury to body or to mental health, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against the civilian population.

24. Mindful of the differences in scope and number of victims between the series of terrorist attacks committed in Lebanon and the killings and executions perpetrated on a large and massive scale in other parts of the world subject to the jurisdiction of any of the existing international criminal jurisdictions, it was nevertheless considered that the 14 attacks committed in Lebanon could meet the prima facie definition of the crime, as developed in the jurisprudence of international criminal tribunals. The attacks that occurred in Lebanon since 1 October 2004 could reveal a “pattern” or “methodical plan” of attacks against a civilian population, albeit not in its entirety. They could be “collective” in nature, or “a multiple commission of acts”⁴ and, as such, exclude a single, isolated or random conduct of an individual acting alone. For the crime of murder, as part of a systematic attack against a civilian population, to qualify as a “crime against humanity”, its massive scale is not an indispensable element.

25. However, considering the views expressed by interested members of the Security Council, there was insufficient support for the inclusion of crimes against humanity within the subject matter jurisdiction of the tribunal. For this reason, therefore, the qualification of the crimes was limited to common crimes under the Lebanese Criminal Code.

³ Article 314 of the Criminal Code provides as follows:

“The term ‘acts of terrorism’ includes all acts that are intended to cause a state of alarm and have been committed by means such as explosive devices, inflammable substances, toxic or corrosive products or infectious or microbial agents that are liable to pose a public threat.”

Articles 6 and 7, respectively, of the 1958 law provide:

“All acts of terrorism shall be punishable by hard labour for life. Capital punishment shall be incurred if there were human fatalities or if a building has been wholly or partially destroyed when a person was inside, or if the act results in the destruction, even partial, of a public building, industrial installation, ship or other structure or damage to communications or transport links.”

“Conspiracy to commit one of the crimes mentioned in the preceding articles shall be punishable by hard labour for life.”

⁴ Article 7, paragraph 2 (a), of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court defines an “attack directed against any civilian population” as “a course of conduct involving the multiple commission of acts ... against any civilian population pursuant to or in furtherance of a State or organizational policy to commit such attack”.

D. Individual criminal responsibility

26. Under article 3, paragraph 1, of the statute, all those who committed, participated as accomplice, organized or directed others to commit the crime, or otherwise contributed to the commission of the crime, shall be individually responsible. This is a reflection of the Lebanese Criminal Code and general criminal law principles, evidenced, inter alia, by article 2, paragraph 3, of the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings of 1997 (General Assembly resolution 52/164, annex). Article 3, paragraph 2, reflects the principle of command responsibility both under international law and national criminal and military codes as more fully articulated in article 28, subparagraph (b), of the Statute of the International Criminal Court. Under article 3, paragraph 3, obedience to superior order is no defence, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment.

IV. Organizational structure of the special tribunal

A. The organs of the special tribunal

27. The special tribunal for Lebanon will consist of the following organs: the chambers (a pre-trial judge, a trial chamber and an appeals chamber), the prosecutor, the registry and the defence office. The composition of the chambers is mixed, with a majority of international judges in the trial and the appeals chambers. An international prosecutor, assisted by a Lebanese deputy prosecutor, is responsible for the investigation and prosecution of persons who may have committed the crimes falling within the jurisdiction of the tribunal. The registrar is appointed by the Secretary-General and is a staff member of the United Nations. The establishment of the special tribunal with a majority of international judges, an international prosecutor and a registrar is consistent with the long-established United Nations position that in the establishment of any mixed tribunal a substantial international component is a guarantee for the independence, objectivity and impartiality of the trial process.

B. Pre-trial judge

28. Pre-trial proceedings exist in different forms in all international criminal tribunals. However, unlike the pre-trial judge of either of the ad hoc tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, or of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, who is designated by the presiding judge of a trial chamber from among the members of that chamber, the pre-trial judge of the special tribunal for Lebanon is a dedicated, single international judge serving as a pre-trial judge only and not as a member of any of the chambers.

29. The role of the pre-trial judge is primarily to review the indictment and, if a prima facie case is established, to confirm the indictment. At the pre-trial phase and throughout the investigation, the pre-trial judge may issue any orders or warrants of arrest, detention or transfer of persons as may be requested by the prosecutor for the purpose of the investigation. In the decade-long experience of United Nations-based tribunals, the role of the pre-trial judge has proved crucial to ensuring the efficiency and expediency of the trial process.

C. Defence office

30. The need for a defence office to protect the rights of suspects and accused has evolved in the practice of United Nations-based tribunals as part of the need to ensure “equality of arms”, where the prosecutor’s office is an organ of the tribunal and is financed in its entirety through the budget of the tribunal. The statute of the special tribunal institutionalizes the defence office. The head of the office is appointed by the Secretary-General, although, in carrying out its functions, the office is independent. The defence office of the special tribunal is to protect the rights of the defence, draw up the list of defence counsel and provide support and assistance to defence counsel and persons entitled to such legal assistance.

V. Conduct of the trial process

A. Due process of law

31. With all the specificities of the special tribunal for Lebanon, its standards of justice and guarantees of due process of law are modelled on the highest international standards of criminal justice. In addition to listing the rights of the accused, including an elaborated provision on the presumption of innocence and the burden of proof, the statute provides for the rights of suspects during investigation, including the right not to be compelled to incriminate oneself, to be informed of the charges against him or her, to have legal assistance and to be questioned in the presence of counsel. The statute also protects the rights of victims whose personal interests are affected and, while not recognizing them as “parties civiles”, it permits their views and concerns to be presented and considered at all stages of the proceedings.

B. Elements of civil law and common law systems combined

32. The proceedings before the special tribunal, while essentially adversarial, contain elements of both civil and common law systems. While distinctive features of civil law, namely, the institution of an investigating judge and the participation of victims as “parties civiles” are absent, the trial process before the special tribunal is inspired by the civil law system in the following two respects, the active role of the judges and the conduct of trials in absentia:

(a) The judges of the special tribunal will take a more active role in the conduct of the trial process and the examination of witnesses. Under article 20 of the statute, unless otherwise decided by the trial chamber, “examination of witnesses shall commence with questions posed by the presiding judge, followed by questions posed by other members of the Trial Chamber, the Prosecutor and the Defence”. The trial chamber may also proprio motu “decide to call additional witnesses and/or order the production of additional evidence”;

(b) The institution of trials in absentia is common in a number of civil law legal systems, including Lebanon’s. In addition, in the present case, where the conduct of joint trials for some or all of the cases falling within the jurisdiction of the tribunal is likely, it would be crucial to ensure that the legal process is not unduly or indefinitely delayed because of the absence of some accused.

33. In introducing the institution of trials in absentia on the conditions that the accused has waived his or her right to be present, that he or she has not been handed over or absconded, or otherwise cannot be found, the statute of the special tribunal takes account of the relevant case law of the European Court of Human Rights, which determined the regularity of trials in absentia in full respect for the rights of the accused.⁵ Accordingly, and as a supplement to the Lebanese Criminal Procedure, article 22 of the statute provides that, where hearings are conducted in the absence of the accused, the special tribunal shall ensure that the accused has designated a defence counsel to be present in the trial or that, if he or she has refused to do so, one will be assigned to him or her by the tribunal's defence office. In case of conviction, the accused shall have the right to be re-tried in his or her presence, if the accused has not designated a defence counsel of his or her choosing in the first trial. Otherwise, the conviction will stand.

C. Receivability and admissibility of evidence collected prior to the establishment of the special tribunal

34. It will be necessary to have a coordinated transition between the work of the Commission and the special tribunal. While the modalities of such transition would be determined taking into account the progress of work of the Commission, it is necessary at this stage to ensure that the work of the Commission is preserved and that evidence collected by it prior to the establishment of the tribunal is nevertheless receivable by the tribunal.

35. In this connection, the Commission noted in its fourth report (S/2006/375, para. 111), that:

“While based on relevant international standards, the internal procedure takes into account Lebanese law and judicial procedures, as well as the practice of the Commission since its establishment. In defining the standards to be applied, the Commission considered the procedures of international criminal jurisdictions and the minimum guarantees afforded by international criminal law and international human rights law. The internal procedure will therefore help ensure that any information collected or obtained by the Commission is admissible in future legal proceedings, notably before a tribunal of an international character”.

36. In the circumstances, it is necessary to provide for the receivability of evidence collected by the national authorities of Lebanon and by the Commission in accordance with its mandate, on the understanding that its admissibility and the weight to be given to such evidence shall be determined by the tribunal in accordance with international standards on the collection of evidence.

⁵ Case of Krombach v. France, European Court of Human Rights, Application No. 29731/96, Judgment, 13 February 2001; and Case of Sejdovic v. Italy, European Court of Human Rights, Application No. 56581/00, Judgment, 1 March 2006.

VI. Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon

37. The agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon would govern the terms of United Nations cooperation in establishing the tribunal. It stipulates the composition of the tribunal, the procedure for the nomination and appointment of judges (both international and Lebanese), of the international prosecutor and the Lebanese deputy prosecutor and of the registrar and other members of the tribunal, as well as the privileges and immunities to which they are entitled.

38. As a non-United Nations organ, the special tribunal would not be entitled to the privileges and immunities of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 1946. For the special tribunal, its premises, funds, archives and all members of the tribunal, to enjoy comparable privileges and immunities, the agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon, as well as the future headquarters agreement between the United Nations, the Government of Lebanon and the host State, will have to provide for the necessary privileges and immunities.

39. The agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon draws, for the most part, upon the agreements signed between the United Nations and the Governments of Cambodia and of Sierra Leone. The provisions relating to the location of the seat and the funding mechanism, however, are Lebanon-specific.

A. Location of the seat

40. For a variety of reasons, the parties share the view that it would be desirable to locate the seat of the tribunal outside Lebanon. In the choice of the seat, considerations of justice and fairness, administrative efficiency, the rights of victims and proximity to witnesses, existence of suitable facilities — both for the tribunal and its detention facilities — security arrangements and affordable costs, would be fully taken into account.

41. The location of the seat outside Lebanon will require the conclusion of a headquarters agreement between the United Nations, the Government of Lebanon and the host State. It is envisaged that when an agreement, in principle, is reached on the location of the seat, the Secretariat will dispatch a United Nations planning mission to identify adequate premises and negotiate the terms of the headquarters agreement.

42. Like the “split seat” of the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994, where the Prosecutor conducts some investigations through his office in Kigali, while the seat of the Tribunal is in Arusha, the choice of the seat of the special tribunal outside Lebanon will not affect the operation of the prosecutor’s office and the conduct of investigations in Lebanon, as necessary and subject to the conclusion of appropriate arrangements with the Government of Lebanon. The arrangements governing the presence of the Commission in Lebanon under the Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of the Republic of Lebanon and the United Nations regarding the Modalities of Cooperation for the International Independent Investigation Commission, signed on 13 June 2005 (see S/2005/393), depending on the circumstances prevailing at the time of the establishment of the tribunal, may be expanded to apply, mutatis mutandis, to the presence of an office of the prosecutor in Lebanon.

43. As is customarily the case with respect to tribunals of all kinds, the possibility that the special tribunal for Lebanon will meet away from its seat when it considers it necessary for the efficient exercise of its functions is provided for in article 8, paragraph 2, of the agreement.

B. Funding mechanism

44. In its resolution 1664 (2006), the Security Council requested the Secretary-General to submit options for a funding mechanism appropriate to ensure the continued and effective functioning of the tribunal. Without prejudice to the authority of the General Assembly in budgetary matters under Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, several options are, in principle, available in the determination of the funding mechanism of the special tribunal: assessed contributions in whole or in part; voluntary contributions; or assessed and voluntary contributions combined. As the Government of Lebanon has expressed its willingness to bear a substantial part of the expenses of the tribunal,⁶ all options but one include a provision that 49 per cent of the expenses of the tribunal would be borne by the Government of Lebanon. An indication of possible options and a proposed corresponding article are described below.

1. Assessed contributions

45. The merits of assessed contributions — the funding mechanism of the two ad hoc tribunals, the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda — were debated at the time of the establishment of the Special Court for Sierra Leone. In his report to the Security Council (S/2000/915), the Secretary-General expressed the view that only regular, predictable, assessed contributions could produce a viable and sustainable mechanism affording secure and continuous funding. It was also his view (para. 70) that:

“A financial mechanism based entirely on voluntary contributions will not provide the assured and continuous source of funding which would be required to appoint the judges, the Prosecutor and the Registrar, to contract the services of all administrative and support staff and to purchase the necessary equipment. The risks associated with the establishment of an operation of this kind with insufficient funds, or without long-term assurances of continuous availability of funds, are very high, in terms of both moral responsibility and loss of credibility of the Organization, and its exposure to legal liability.”

⁶ A firm commitment by the Government of Lebanon on defraying its share in the expenses of the tribunal would be required before the agreement could be signed by the Secretary-General.

46. Funding through assessed contributions could be either in whole or in part. If considered an expense of the Organization under Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations, it should be financed from assessed contributions. Any voluntary contributions, including the contribution of the Government of Lebanon, would be supplemental and be used to implement specific non-core activities. It is recalled in this connection that if a decision to fund the special tribunal through assessed contributions is adopted, it would be for the General Assembly, as the authority entrusted under Article 17 of the Charter with the responsibility to consider and approve the budget, to decide on the source of funding, as well as on any budgetary and administrative arrangements to be put in place. It is also recalled that funding through assessed contributions would trigger the applicability to the special tribunal of the United Nations Financial and Staff Regulations and Rules.

47. If the mechanism of assessed contributions in whole is accepted, the relevant provision of the agreement would read:

“The expenses of the Special Tribunal shall be considered expenses of the Organization in accordance with Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations.”

48. If the mechanism of assessed contributions in part is accepted, the relevant provision in the agreement would read:

“The expenses of the Special Tribunal shall be borne in the following manner:

“(a) Fifty-one per cent of the expenses of the Tribunal shall be considered expenses of the Organization in accordance with Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations;

“(b) Forty-nine per cent of the expenses of the Tribunal shall be borne by the Government of Lebanon.”

2. Voluntary contributions

49. Voluntary contributions was the funding mechanism of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia, although in the former case a one-time subvention was granted by the General Assembly to replenish the dwindling reserves of the Special Court. If the option of voluntary contributions, as the sole funding mechanism of the tribunal, is adopted, then the corresponding article would read:

“The expenses of the Special Tribunal shall be borne in the following manner:

“(a) Fifty-one per cent of the expenses of the Tribunal shall be borne by voluntary contributions from States;

“(b) Forty-nine per cent of the expenses of the Tribunal shall be borne by the Government of Lebanon.”

3. Combined funding mechanism

50. While the Secretary-General maintains his principled position in support of assessed contributions as the funding mechanism of international criminal jurisdictions, the uniqueness of the special tribunal for Lebanon may warrant a different approach to the establishment of the financial mechanism. The formula proposed is a combined formula of both voluntary and assessed contributions. It provides for a continuation of assessed contributions to fund investigations (as is currently the case with the Commission) and this may be considered more viable and sustainable than other options wholly reliant on voluntary contributions. If accepted, the corresponding article would read:

“The expenses of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon shall be borne in the following manner:

“(a) The expenses incurred for investigations shall continue to be considered expenses of the Organization in accordance with Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations;

“(b) Fifty-one per cent of the expenses of the Tribunal, excluding those related to investigations, shall be borne by voluntary contributions from States;

“(c) Forty-nine per cent of the expenses of the Tribunal, excluding those related to investigations, shall be borne by the Government of Lebanon.”

51. With regard to the options described in paragraphs 49 and 50 above, both of which involve voluntary contributions, the sufficiency of funds must be guaranteed before the Secretary-General can be expected to commence the process of establishment of the tribunal. In any of these options, therefore, the following text should be inserted as paragraph 2 of the corresponding article:

“It is understood that the Secretary-General will commence the process of establishing the Tribunal when he has sufficient contributions in hand to finance the establishment of the Tribunal and twelve months of its operations, plus pledges equal to the anticipated expenses of the following twenty-four months of the Tribunal’s operation. Should voluntary contributions be insufficient for the Tribunal to implement its mandate, the Secretary-General and the Security Council shall explore alternate means of financing the Tribunal.”

C. Cooperation with the special tribunal

52. Article 15 of the agreement places an obligation on the Government of Lebanon to cooperate with the tribunal at all stages of the proceedings and to comply with its requests for assistance in the identification and location of persons, service of documents, arrest and detention of persons, and the transfer of indictees to the tribunal.

53. In maintaining the logic of Security Council resolutions 1595 (2005), 1636 (2005) and 1644 (2005), under which Member States are obliged to cooperate fully with the Commission in its investigation of the Hariri assassination, the Council may wish, at the appropriate stages and as necessary, to consider similar measures to enable the special tribunal more effectively to prosecute those responsible for the attack against Rafiq Hariri and for other attacks falling within the jurisdiction of the tribunal.

VII. Conclusion

54. On 10 November 2006, I transmitted to the Prime Minister of Lebanon the draft agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Lebanon on the establishment of a special tribunal for Lebanon, to which was annexed a draft statute for such a tribunal. By his letter to me of 13 November 2006, the Prime Minister informed me that the Lebanese Council of Ministers had agreed in its session of that date to the draft and looked forward to the completion of the remaining steps leading to the establishment of the tribunal. By a note verbale dated 14 November 2006, the Permanent Mission of Lebanon forwarded to me a copy of observations made by the President of the Lebanese Republic, including a challenge to the decision of the Council of Ministers. The negotiated instruments are now submitted to the Security Council for its consideration.

2. With respect to superior and subordinate relationships, a superior shall be criminally responsible for any of the crimes set forth in article 2 of this Statute committed by subordinates under his or her effective authority and control, as a result of his or her failure to exercise control properly over such subordinates, where:

2. A person who has been tried by a national court may be subsequently tried by the Special Tribunal if the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, were designed to shield the accused from criminal responsibility for crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal or the case was not diligently prosecuted.
3. In considering the penalty to be imposed on a person convicted of a crime under this Statute, the Special Tribunal shall take into account the extent to which any penalty imposed by a national court on the same person for the same act has already been served.
