I. Introduction

1. The present report summarizes the results of the mission of the Independent Expert on the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Ecuador, two member States of the Bolivarian Alliance for the Peoples of Our America,¹ at the invitation of the respective Governments. The mission focused on alternative social and economic models and their implications for a democratic and equitable international order, with one leg in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela from 26 November to 4 December and another in Ecuador from 4 to 9 December 2017 (see annex I). The particularities of each country are sui generis and should not be amalgamated. The parameters of the mission were announced in a statement issued on 27 November 2017.²

2. The Human Rights Council, in its resolution 18/6 creating the mandate of the Independent Expert, reaffirmed the determination to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom. It also reaffirmed the need to continue working urgently for the establishment of an international economic order based on equity, sovereign equality, interdependence, common interest and cooperation among all States, irrespective of their economic and social systems. It instructed the mandate holder to work in cooperation with States in order to foster the adoption of measures at the local, national, regional and international levels aimed at the promotion and protection of a democratic and equitable international order.

3. The duty of the special procedures is to learn about the situations on the ground, listen to stakeholders on all sides, evaluate documents, ask targeted questions, and formulate constructive recommendations. A result-oriented mission aims at understanding the problems in a political, economic, psychological and historical context, so as to propose measures to better realize all human rights. A comprehensive approach requires, inter alia, consideration of the constitutions, laws and practices of States, as well as of reports by intergovernmental organizations and conferences, including the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC), the World Health Organization (WHO), the International Labour Organization (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the Organization of American States, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the Community of Latin American and Caribbean States (CELAC), the Bolivarian Alliance for the Peoples of Our America, the Latin American Economic System (SELA), the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR), the Union of South American Nations, the Non-Aligned Movement, Summits of the Americas and People's Summits, reports issued by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, national reports submitted for the universal periodic review and State party reports to the treaty bodies. In drafting the present report, the Independent Expert benefited from studying mission reports by the Independent Expert on human rights and international solidarity, Virginia Dandan, the Independent Expert on the effects of foreign debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights, Juan Pablo Bohoslavsky, and the Special Rapporteur on the negative impact of unilateral coercive measures on the enjoyment of human rights, Idriss Jazairy. He also consulted publications by Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, the International Commission of Jurists, the Fundación Latinoamericana por los Derechos Humanos y el Desarrollo Social, civil society organizations and universities (see annexes II and VII).

4. As one of the few special procedure mandate holders to be given access to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Ecuador, expectations for the mission were high. While the Independent Expert could not fulfil the hopes of some sectors of civil society and remain within the parameters of his mandate, he listened to their grievances and transmitted their concerns to the competent rapporteurs and working groups. He informed his interlocutors that he was not "the United Nations", a super-rapporteur, a plenipotentiary or a country rapporteur, but an independent expert for international order. He invited interlocutors to give him information and petitions on issues which could be examined in depth by the Special Rapporteurs on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, on the independence of judges and lawyers, on the right to food, on the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, on the rights of indigenous peoples, and by the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention. He took the opportunity of informing government authorities of these concerns, which he incorporated into his preliminary recommendations.

5. The present report gives a fresh look at the realities of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Ecuador, two countries that have adopted differing socioeconomic models when tackling internal issues of poverty, health care, housing and education. In both countries, the Independent Expert learned of problems associated with corruption, financial constraints, para-institutional failures, and lingering difficulties in ensuring free, prior and informed consent in the extractive field, particularly concerning indigenous communities. In the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, he observed the adverse impacts of inflation, price controls,³ contraband,⁴ inefficient distribution, mismanagement, and repression of dissent.

6. He listened to hundreds of stakeholders, including representatives of United Nations agencies and the Organization of American States (OAS), and received a wealth of information. The visits included meetings with ministers of both countries, ambassadors, diplomats, government officials, church leaders, academics, economists, students, and civil society organizations. In particular cases, he was approached by, and heard the stories of, individual victims. He balanced his meetings between different groups and was proactive in demanding targeted information. After the mission, he requested and received additional information, which he duly reflected, confident that the dialogue begun with each Government will continue through the visits of other rapporteurs.

7. His methodology followed the principle audiatur et altera pars (listen to all sides), and the letter and spirit of the Code of Conduct for Special Procedures Mandate Holders of the Human Rights Council, article 3 (a) of which stipulates that mandate holders shall act in an independent capacity and exercise their functions in accordance with their mandate. Article 6 requires mandate holders to establish the facts, based on objective, reliable information emanating from relevant credible sources that they have duly cross-checked to the best extent possible; take into account in a comprehensive and timely manner in particular information provided by the State concerned on situations relevant to their mandate; evaluate all information in the light of internationally recognized human rights standards relevant to their mandate, and of international conventions to which the State concerned is a party. In assessing the evidence, the Independent Expert was critical both of governmental and civil society sources, conscious of the possibility of distortions and suppression of evidence. He considered whether specific cases were representative and avoided extrapolation. He kept an open mind, ready to change perspective in the light of evidence received from stakeholders on all sides.

8. After his mission, he continued to follow developments in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, including the refusal of the opposition to sign the negotiated agreement of 7 February 2018, the Declaration of the Summit of the Americas⁵ and that of the People's Summit,⁶ both held in Lima in April 2018.

9. Having arrived at his own diagnoses, he proposes how best to enhance the enjoyment of all human rights by the populations of both countries, including through dialogue, increased international cooperation, and reform of treaties, legislation and practices. The mission examined efforts to advance social progress and better standards of living consistent with the provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the agendas of the World Social Forums since the first one was held in 2001 in Porto Alegre, Brazil. He paid special attention to the reports presented by the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Ecuador to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and studied the concluding observations of those bodies. He compared their analyses with the relevant reports issued by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights between 2013 and 2018⁷ and the responses of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Ecuador thereto.

10. The present report considers the relevance of General Assembly resolutions on international order, including 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations, 72/4 on the United States embargo against Cuba, and 60/1 on the 2005 World Summit Outcome, which reaffirms that democracy is a universal value based on the freely expressed will of people to determine their own political, economic, social and cultural systems and their full participation in all aspects of their lives, that democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms are interdependent and mutually reinforcing, and that while democracies share common features, there is no single model of democracy. Thus, the models of democracy of the "Revolución Bolivariana"⁸ in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and the "Revolución Ciudadana"⁹ in Ecuador deserve attention.¹⁰

11. The socioeconomic models prevalent in both countries, as well as in the Plurinational State of Bolivia, Cuba and Nicaragua, reveal possibilities of greater regional integration and cooperation with international organizations, particularly the United Nations system, which can assist governments to achieve social progress and strengthen civil liberties. The Independent Expert noted the eradication of illiteracy,¹¹ free education from primary school to university, and programmes to reduce extreme poverty, provide housing to the homeless and vulnerable, phase out privilege and discrimination, and extend medical care to everyone.

⁶ "Condenamos enérgicamente la agresión imperialista, la guerra económica y el acoso político contra la Venezuela Bolivariana. Exigimos respeto a la soberanía de la patria del pueblo venezolano que desde 1999 inició un proceso constituyente popular que ha marcado la senda ... por la unidad latinoamericana ... exigimos el cese de las sanciones ilegítimas y unilaterales contra el pueblo bolivariano, rechazamos la pretensión de la intervención militar en Venezuela bajo el pretexto de ayuda humanitaria."

12. It is appropriate for rapporteurs to highlight beneficial initiatives and recognize lessons learned. In the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, the Gran Misión Vivienda low-cost housing programme has contributed to saving millions of persons from homelessness. Over two million housing units have been delivered to persons who would otherwise live in shanty towns. In order to address hunger, the Local Supply and Production Committees provide needy Venezuelans with 16kg packages containing sugar, flour, dried milk, oil etc., as the Independent Expert was able to verify at the Urbanización Nelson Mandela. Another social acquis, El Sistema, established by the late José Antonio Abreu, has offered free musical education to over one million youngsters,¹² contributing to a reduction in juvenile delinquency. Gustavo Dudamel,¹³ Music and Artistic Director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, is a product of El Sistema.

13. In Ecuador, the Independent Expert sought to learn about the initiatives to draft a binding legal instrument on the social responsibility of transnational enterprises,¹⁴ establishing a United Nations tax authority to prevent tax evasion and illicit financial flows,¹⁵ efforts toward a financial transactions tax,¹⁶ advances on the draft declaration on the rights of peasants,¹⁷ and the continued struggle against corruption and international money-laundering.¹⁸

14. He recognizes that the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Ecuador both devote around 70 per cent of their national budgets to social services. A priority for both countries is to promote dialogue among all sectors of the population. The genuine thirst for peace and justice, which the Ecuadorians call buen vivir, is reflected in the 2013 Quito Communiqué adopted by the Inter-Parliamentary Union¹⁹ and in the 2014 CELAC declaration proclaiming Latin America and the Caribbean a “zone of peace”.

II. Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

A. Achievements and engagement by other human rights mechanisms

15. In June 2015, the Human Rights Committee examined the fourth periodic report of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. In its concluding observations, it welcomed numerous legislative initiatives, including the adoption of the Indigenous Peoples and Communities Act and the Act on Women’s Right to a Life Free from Violence, and the establishment of the Ministry of People’s Power for Indigenous Peoples and of the Ministry of People’s Power for Women and Gender Equality. The Committee noted with satisfaction that the Constitution provided that human rights treaties were immediately and directly applicable by the courts and other public bodies (see CCPR/C/VEN/CO/4, paras. 3 and 5).

16. The Committee expressed concern at reports of the alleged commission of human rights violations during protests. While taking into account that some protesters might have resorted to violence, the Committee was concerned at numerous reports of cases of excessive and disproportionate use of force, torture and ill-treatment, arbitrary detention and failure to uphold fundamental legal safeguards. While it took note of the investigations that were under way, only seven civil servants had been convicted at that time (ibid., para. 14).

17. Also in June 2015, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights examined the third periodic report the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. In its concluding observations, it noted with satisfaction the progress made in combating poverty and reducing inequality, and in the fight against malnutrition through the expansion of the school meals programme and the food allowance for low-income families (see E/C.12/VEN/CO/3, para. 5). It noted the delegation's commitment that, despite the economic difficulties caused by, among other reasons, the fall in oil revenues, the State party would continue to make every effort to prevent the situation from affecting social investment and the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights (ibid., para. 6).

18. The Committee expressed concern at reports that consultations with indigenous peoples were not held regularly and with full guarantees, particularly when granting concessions for the exploration and development of natural resources. It was also concerned by reports that the legally established procedure for appointing and removing judges was not applied and by the large number of judges appointed to posts on a temporary basis, who, without security of tenure, might find that their independence significantly affected (ibid., paras. 9–10). It was further concerned by reports of acts of violence and intimidation against trade union leaders and members (ibid., para. 20).²⁰

19. The universal periodic review of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela took place in November 2016. As at June 2017, the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela had committed to implementing 193 of the 274 recommendations made, and had noted the remaining 81.

20. A problem in assessing the situation is the widening gulf between the Government's and the opposition's narratives, and the media disinformation, simplification and extrapolation. The Independent Expert consulted data from multiple sources, including presentations by non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to the Human Rights Council.²¹

21. Undoubtedly, Venezuelans are suffering from an economic crisis that has generated dysfunctions, scarcity in foods and medicines,²² delays in distribution, and accompanying violations of human rights.²³ Critics in and outside the country see it as a failed State and blame the crisis on the fiasco of socialism,²⁴ but few look for other contributing factors. By contrast, the Government tends to blame outside causes, notably the drop in oil prices, international smuggling rings, contraband, sanctions, and 19 years of economic warfare, not unlike the non-conventional wars waged against Cuba, Chile and Nicaragua. With political will and international solidarity, solutions can be found, since the Bolivarian Republic of

Venezuela is a rich country with the largest oil reserves in the world and major gold, bauxite and coltan deposits,²⁵ enough to finance the needs of the Venezuelan people, provided that the country is allowed to function free of embargoes and financial blockades.²⁶

22. Observers have identified errors committed by the Chávez and Maduro Governments, noting that there are too many ideologues and too few technocrats in public administration, resulting in government policies that lack coherence and professional management and discourage domestic investment, already crippled by inefficiency and corruption,²⁷ which extend to government officials, transnational corporations and entrepreneurs.²⁸ Critics warn about the undue influence of the military on government and on the running of enterprises like Petróleos de Venezuela. The lack of regular, publicly available data on nutrition, epidemiology and inflation are said to complicate efforts to provide humanitarian support.²⁹

23. Meanwhile, the Attorney General, Tarek Saab, has launched a vigorous anti-corruption campaign,³⁰ investigating the links between Venezuelan enterprises and tax havens, contracting scams, and deals by public officials with Odebrecht.³¹ It is estimated that corruption in the oil industry has cost the Government US$ 4.8 billion.³² The Attorney General's Office informed the Independent Expert of pending investigations for embezzlement and extortion against 79 officials of Petróleos de Venezuela, including 22 senior managers. The Office also pointed to the arrest of two high-level oil executives,³³ accused of money-laundering in Andorra. The Ministry of Justice estimates corruption losses at some US$ 15 billion.³⁴ Other stakeholders, in contrast, assert that anti-corruption programmes are selective and have not sufficiently targeted State institutions, including the military.³⁵

24. Bearing in mind that the mission had to follow the terms of reference of the mandate, the Independent Expert did not undertake a global inquiry into violations of civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights. Those issues are being dealt with by treaty bodies and deserve investigation by other rapporteurs. The mission necessarily focused on those issues related to the promotion of a democratic and equitable international order, including the need to promote increased regional and international cooperation,³⁶ survey policies aimed at stopping illicit financial flows and tax havens, ensure freedom of commerce and financial transactions without discrimination, address problems of sovereign debt restructuring,³⁷ obtain information on policies concerning the distribution of resources and regulation of the private sector,³⁸ and explore ways of strengthening mutual legal assistance in criminal matters.

25. Private sector actors have pointed to the State acquisition of private property, price controls³⁹ and worsened working conditions as reducing private sector confidence, and thus contributing to an economic crisis in the country. Private sector unions question strict controls on currency exchange, which they say cause businesses to hesitate to price and sell goods for fear of violating the law. In addition, as raised in an ongoing complaint to ILO, business people and some workers' unions have alleged that they are excluded from dialogue that impacts the labour sector and that they have been subject to persecution by the State, contrary to ILO conventions on freedom of association, tripartite consultation and setting minimum wages.⁴⁰ In March 2018, in the absence of progress, the ILO Governing Body decided to appoint a Commission on Inquiry.⁴¹

26. It has been suggested by entrepreneurs that the Government should exercise more flexibility with monetary policies and provide incentives to the private sector — as has been done in other countries that maintain progressive social models, while easing exchange and loosening price controls — so as to ensure that entrepreneurs are not driven out of business by high replacement costs and a feeling of insecurity, which discourages domestic and international investment.

B. Obstacles to the enjoyment of human rights: economic warfare

27. The Independent Expert inquired from the Government and the opposition about the impact of measures adopted by several States aimed directly and indirectly at affecting the functioning of the Venezuelan economy. He also looked at the problem of currency speculation, one of the preferred tools to destabilize targeted economies, and the activities of credit rating agencies,⁴² which, although they have neither democratic legitimacy nor oversight, have a significant impact on the financial ability of States to issue bonds and obtain financing. The Banco Central de Venezuela informed him that risk rating agencies, primarily Standard & Poor's, Moody's and Fitch, have consistently issued negative ratings based on the country's ability to make external payments, forgetting that the Government has a history of excellent debt response. That has had a significant effect on the country's risk level and has essentially shut down its possibilities of accessing the financial market.

28. Illicit flows, or the illegal transferring of funds from one jurisdiction to another, has had an adverse impact on the ability of States to meet their financial obligations, as has the use of tax havens. International cooperation is necessary to ensure the repatriation of these funds.⁴³ It also appears that international criminal groups are responsible for the theft of public resources, food items and medicines, which have found their way into neighbouring countries. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) can help States tackle some of these problems. There have been cases of hoarding⁴⁴ of food, medicines and personal hygiene items, with the items subsequently released onto the black market.⁴⁵ In some cases, the hoarding has been so prolonged that hidden food and medicines have perished.⁴⁶ Government officials also shared concerns about the widespread sabotage of public property,⁴⁷ arson attacks on public buildings, buses, ambulances, hospitals, maternity wards and other institutions, destruction of electricity and telephone lines, paramilitarism⁴⁸ in frontier regions⁴⁹ and other violent acts tantamount to terrorism.

C. Multilateralism and the principle of non-intervention

29. The Charter of the United Nations rests on the philosophy of multilateralism, a commitment to international cooperation, and the sovereign equality of States. Countries must not be isolated and boycotted, but helped in strengthening their democratic institutions. Over the past sixty years, non-conventional economic wars have been waged against Cuba,⁵⁰ Chile,⁵¹ Nicaragua,⁵² the Syrian Arab Republic⁵³ and the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela in order to make their economies fail, facilitate regime change and impose a neo-liberal socioeconomic model. In order to discredit selected governments, failures in the field of human rights are maximized so as to make violent overthrow more palatable. Human rights are being “weaponized” against rivals. Yet, human rights are the heritage of every human being and should never be instrumentalized as weapons of demonization. Instead, measures of inclusion are necessary, as is reliance on the expertise of international organizations such

30. The principles of non-intervention⁶⁴ and non-interference⁶⁵ in the internal affairs of sovereign States belong to customary international law and have been reaffirmed in General Assembly resolutions, notably 2625 (XXV) and 3314 (XXIX), and in the 1993 Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. Article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, adopted by the General Assembly in 1974, stipulates that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights.

31. In its judgment of 27 June 1986 concerning Nicaragua v. United States, the International Court of Justice quoted from resolution 2625 (XXV): "no State shall organize, assist, foment, finance, incite or tolerate subversive, terrorist or armed activities directed towards the violent overthrow of the regime of another State, or interfere in civil strife in another State". In the context of the inter-American system, the Court cited the Convention on the Duties and Rights of States in the Event of Civil Strife, which was confirmed by resolution 78 adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States on 21 April 1972, in which it resolves "To reiterate solemnly the need for the member states of the Organization to observe strictly the principles of non-intervention and self-determination of peoples as a means of ensuring peaceful coexistence among them" and "To reaffirm the obligation of those states to refrain from applying economic, political, or any other type of measures to coerce another state and obtain from it advantages of any kind". Similarly, chapter 4, article 19, of the Charter of the OAS stipulates that "No State or group of States has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other State. The foregoing principle prohibits not only armed force but also any other form of interference or attempted threat against the personality of the State or against its political, economic, and cultural elements".

32. While he was in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, the Independent Expert had long conversations and email exchanges with Pasqualina Curcio, who published a well-documented book entitled The visible hand of the market, analysing the economic war. She reminds readers that in 1970, when Salvador Allende was democratically elected President of Chile, Richard Nixon told Henry Kissinger that the United States would not tolerate an alternative economic model in Latin America and gave orders to “make the Chilean economy scream”,⁶⁶ and when all the boycotts and sanctions failed, Allende was removed by Pinochet’s coup in September 1973.⁶⁷ The Spanish economist Alfredo Serrano, head of the Centro Estratégico Latinoamericano de Geopolítica, analyses the manipulation of the “country risk factor”,⁶⁸ the refusal of banks to process Venezuelan international transactions, the obstacles to obtaining insulin and other medicines,⁶⁹ the artificially induced inflation, and the arbitrary “dollar today” figures.⁷⁰ Furthermore, staff of the Banco Central de Venezuela explained to the Independent Expert that the pernicious exchange rate published on a website that was not grounded in factual purchase and sale transactions had been negatively impacting the economy, primarily, as a price marker, raising inflations levels, constituting an instrument of war that had risen constantly, accumulating during the year an upward variation trend over 2,465 per cent.

33. According to Pasqualina Curcio, the manipulation of the exchange rate has been the most effective strategy to disrupt the Venezuelan economy. It has an impact not only on the foreign exchange market, but also price levels of the economy, leading to the loss of purchasing power, distortion of markets and production. She explains that:

The variations of the parallel exchange rate published in websites since 2012 do not correspond to the historical behaviour of the ratio between international reserves and monetary liquidity. This leads us to uphold our theory that the levels of this type of parallel exchange rate do not respond to economic factors but rather to political ones in the framework of this manipulation of the economic warfare against the people in Venezuela ... The unconventional nonviolent warfare method that has been evidently used since 2012 to distort the Venezuelan economy and to provoke social unrest and political destabilization is known in economic terms as supply shock, generated by the inflation costs. The tool used is the manipulation of the exchange rate in the parallel black market.⁷¹

D. Economic sanctions

34. While arms sales embargoes may be justifiable against some countries, especially to facilitate dialogue and peacemaking, economic sanctions that hurt innocent populations contravene the spirit and letter of the Charter of the United Nations. Over decades, United Nations bodies have condemned unilateral coercive measures,⁷² notably in the landmark 2000 study of the Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights,⁷³ documenting the adverse human rights impact of those measures. Multilateral sanctions, even those imposed by the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter, can also cause suffering and death. In the 1990s, two United Nations Assistant Secretary-Generals, Denis Halliday and Hans-Christof von Sponeck,⁷⁴ quit their Humanitarian Coordinator functions in Iraq to protest against sanctions, which had caused more than a million deaths among Iraqis, particularly children,⁷⁵ and which they qualified as a form of genocide.⁷⁶

35. On 23 March 2018, the Human Rights Council condemned unilateral coercive measures by a vote of 28 in favour, 15 against and 3 abstentions,⁷⁷ because economic sanctions demonstrably cause death, aggravate economic crises, disrupt the production and distribution of food and medicine, constitute a push factor generating emigration,⁷⁸ and lead to violations of human rights. The refusal of Colombia to deliver anti-malaria medicine that had been ordered to combat an outbreak in November 2017,⁷⁹ as well as the absence of condemnation from the international community, entails joint responsibility for the aggravation of the crisis. In that case, the anti-malaria medicine had to be imported from India.

36. The effects of sanctions imposed by Presidents Obama and Trump⁸⁰ and unilateral measures by Canada and the European Union have directly and indirectly aggravated the shortages in medicines such as insulin and anti-retroviral drugs. To the extent that economic sanctions have caused delays in distribution and thus contributed to many deaths, sanctions contravene the human rights obligations of the countries imposing them. Moreover, sanctions can amount to crimes against humanity⁸¹ under Article 7 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. An investigation by that Court would be appropriate, but the geopolitical submissiveness of the Court may prevent this.

37. Modern-day economic sanctions and blockades are comparable with medieval sieges of towns with the intention of forcing them to surrender. Twenty-first century sanctions attempt to bring not just a town, but sovereign countries to their knees. A difference, perhaps, is that twenty-first century sanctions are accompanied by the manipulation of public opinion through “fake news”, aggressive public relations and a pseudo-human rights rhetoric so as to give the impression that a human rights “end” justifies the criminal means. There is not only a horizontal juridical world order governed by the Charter of the United Nations and principles of sovereign equality, but also a vertical world order reflecting the hierarchy of a geopolitical system that links dominant States with the rest of the world according to military and economic power. It is the latter, geopolitical system that generates geopolitical crimes, hitherto in total impunity. It is reported that the United States is currently training foreign lawyers in how to draft legislation to impose further sanctions on the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela in an effort to asphyxiate Venezuelan State institutions.⁸²

38. The Banco Central de Venezuela informed the Independent Expert that the sanctions, besides hindering access to external financing and international payments, had affected the normal performance of the national productive apparatus, resulting in a reduction in the supply of local goods and services. For the previous year and a half, the bank had been experiencing difficulties with the correspondent investment of high-level banks; from a total of 33 correspondent accounts, it currently had 14, which operated under a discretionary compliance system, with many limitations that resulted in certain operational restrictions, mostly focused on public debt payments. The problems had worsened relating to the operation of correspondent banks, mainly Citibank, Commerzbank and Deutsche Bank, which currently handled only public debt payment. The situation was resulting in obstacles to the realization of public sector payments (i.e. foods and medicines). Demonstrably, unilateral coercive measures and financial blockades have aggravated the economic crisis and caused unemployment and emigration to Colombia, Brazil and Ecuador, among other countries (see annex VI).⁸³

39. Economic asphyxiation policies are comparable to those already practised in Chile, the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, Nicaragua and the Syrian Arab Republic. In January 2018, Middle East correspondent of The Financial Times and The Independent, Patrick Cockburn, wrote on the sanctions affecting Syria:

There is usually a pretence that foodstuffs and medical equipment are being allowed through freely and no mention is made of the financial and other regulatory obstacles making it impossible to deliver them. An example of this is the draconian sanctions imposed on Syria by the US and EU which were meant to target President Bashar al-Assad and help remove him from power. They have wholly failed to do this, but a UN internal report leaked in 2016 shows all too convincingly the effect of the embargo in stopping the delivery of aid by international aid agencies.⁸⁴ They cannot import the aid despite waivers because banks and commercial companies dare not risk being penalised for having anything to do with Syria. The report quotes a European doctor working in Syria as saying that “the indirect effect of sanctions ... makes the import of the medical instruments and other medical supplies immensely difficult, near impossible”.⁸⁵

In short: economic sanctions kill.

E. International mediation process

40. There is nothing more in keeping with the letter and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations than mediation. For two years, the former Spanish Prime Minister, José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero (annex IV), with the support of the Vatican,⁸⁶ headed a negotiating team in the Dominican Republic which facilitated talks between the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and the opposition. Negotiations advanced to a balanced document entitled “Agreement of Democratic Coexistence” (annex III) that should have been signed by all sides on 7 February 2018. The Government signed, but, as was reported, a telephone call from Colombia frustrated the two-year negotiating process with the instruction: “Don’t sign”.⁸⁷ Some believe that certain countries do not want to see a peaceful solution of the Venezuelan conflict and prefer to prolong the suffering of the Venezuelan people, expecting that the situation will reach the “humanitarian crisis” threshold and trigger a military intervention.

41. Bearing in mind that Venezuelan society is polarized, what is most needed is dialogue between the Government and the opposition,⁸⁸ and it would be a noble task on the part of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to offer his good offices for such a dialogue. Yet, opposition leaders Antonio Ledezma⁸⁹ and Julio Borges,⁹⁰ during a trip through Europe to denounce the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, called for further sanctions⁹¹ as well as a military “humanitarian intervention”.⁹² This attitude generates a palpable malaise in the Government, which remembers the coup of 11–12 April 2002, known as the Carmonazo, which caused dozens of deaths, but ultimately failed.⁹³ Some current opposition members still endorse the coup that installed as President the head of Fedecamerás, Pedro Carmona, and the Carmona decree dissolving all elected bodies, including the National Assembly, governorships and municipal authorities, shutting down the government television channel as well as community radio stations.⁹⁴ Today, millions of Venezuelans worry that foreign interests may again finance a coup to impose a neo-liberal government that would abolish public services and destroy the social acquis. This could engender civil war, since a significant percentage of the population still identifies with the ideals of Chavismo.⁹⁵ In an interview with The New York Times, opposition leader Leopoldo López expressed views endorsing interventionism: “In 1958, there was a military coup that began the transition to democracy ... And in other Latin American countries, there have been coups that called elections. So I don’t want to rule anything out, because the electoral window has been closed. We need to go forward on many different levels. One is street demonstrations; a second is coordination with the international community.”⁹⁶ Those who shout “humanitarian crisis” should inquire whether the economic war and the sanctions are not a major cause. The principle of estoppel prevents those contributing to the crisis from invoking it to demand intervention (ex injuria non oritur jus).

F. Humanitarian crisis and humanitarian intervention

42. A disquieting media campaign seeks to force observers into a preconceived view that there is a “humanitarian crisis” in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. An independent expert must be wary of hyperbole, bearing in mind that “humanitarian crisis” is a terminus technicus that can be misused as a pretext for military intervention.⁹⁷

43. Instead, international solidarity with the Venezuelan people should facilitate the free flow of food and medicines in order to alleviate the current scarcity. Help should be genuinely humanitarian and not pursue ulterior political purposes. The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), Caritas Internationalis and other organizations could assist in coordinating the importation and distribution of aid; the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation could help wipe out malaria in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.⁹⁸ Thanks to UNDP, the Independent Expert was able to convene a meeting with all the United Nations agencies and other regional organizations in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela with a view to coordinating assistance, an initiative that bore fruit shortly thereafter.⁹⁹

44. Although the situation in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela has not yet reached the humanitarian crisis threshold, there is hunger, malnutrition, anxiety, anguish and

In its judgment of 27 June 1986 in the Nicaragua v. United States case, the International Court of Justice noted that “while the United States might form its own appraisal of the situation as to respect for human rights in Nicaragua, the use of force could not be the appropriate method to monitor or ensure such respect”. The Court held that “the United States of America, by training, arming, equipping, financing and supplying the contra forces or otherwise encouraging, supporting and aiding military and paramilitary activities in and against Nicaragua, has acted, against the Republic of Nicaragua, in breach of its obligation under customary international law not to intervene in the affairs of another State”; www.aporrea.org/ddhh/a260597.html.

emigration.¹⁰⁰ What is crucial is to study the causes of the crisis, including neglected factors of sanctions, sabotage, hoarding, black market activities, induced inflation¹⁰¹ and contraband¹⁰² in food and medicines.

45. The “crisis” in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela is an economic crisis, which cannot be compared with the humanitarian crises in Gaza,¹⁰³ Yemen,¹⁰⁴ Libya,¹⁰⁵ the Syrian Arab Republic,¹⁰⁶ Iraq,¹⁰⁷ Haiti,¹⁰⁸ Mali,¹⁰⁹ the Central African Republic,¹¹⁰ South Sudan,¹¹¹ Somalia,¹¹² or Myanmar,¹¹³ among others. It is significant that when, in 2017, the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela requested medical aid from the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, the plea was rejected, because it “is still a high-income country ... and as such is not eligible”.¹¹⁴ During his mission, the Independent Expert discussed the issues of food and medicine scarcity with experts from FAO¹¹⁵ and obtained pertinent data from the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean.¹¹⁶ The December 2017 FAO report and the March 2018 report list food crises in 37 countries. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela is not among them.¹¹⁷

46. It is pertinent to recall the situation in the years prior to the election of Hugo Chávez,¹¹⁸ when the International Monetary Fund (IMF) imposed on Venezuela the “Washington consensus” of restructuring programmes, austerity and privatization (see A/72/1787), which led to mass public demonstrations and a military crackdown, the Caracazo of 1989, leaving some 3,000 dead.¹¹⁹ Corruption was ubiquitous and in 1993, President Carlos Pérez was removed because of embezzlement.¹²⁰ The Chávez election in 1998 reflected despair with the

G. International monitoring of elections in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

47. Participatory democracy in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, called “protagónica”, is anchored in the Constitution of 1999 and relies on frequent elections and referendums.¹²² During the mission, the Independent Expert exchanged views with the Electoral Commission¹²³ and learned that in the 19 years since Chávez, 25 elections and referendums had been conducted, 4 of them observed by the Carter Center. The Independent Expert met with the representative of the Carter Center in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, who recalled Carter’s positive assessment of the electoral system.¹²⁴ They also discussed the constitutional objections raised by the opposition to the referendum held on 30 July 2017, resulting in the creation of a Constitutional Assembly.¹²⁵ Over 8 million Venezuelans voted in the referendum, which was accompanied by international observers,¹²⁶ including from the Council of Electoral Specialists of Latin America.¹²⁷

H. Ad hominem attacks

48. An atmosphere of intimidation accompanied the mission, attempting to pressure the Independent Expert into a predetermined matrix. He received letters from NGOs asking him not to proceed because he was not the “relevant” rapporteur, and almost dictating what should be in the report. Weeks before his arrival, some called the mission a “fake investigation”. Social media insults bordered on “hate speech” and “incitement”. Mobbing before, during and after the mission bore a resemblance to the experience of two American journalists who visited the country in July 2017.¹²⁸ Utilizing platforms such as Facebook and Twitter, critics questioned the Independent Expert’s integrity and accused him of bias, demonstrating a culture of intransigence and refusal to accept the duty of an independent expert to be neutral, objective, dispassionate and to apply his expertise free of external pressures. The idea that an independent expert should think independently and weigh evidence does not seem to have occurred to some critics, for whom human rights are weapons of demonization, not only against governments, but also against experts.¹²⁹ The Independent Expert explained to critics that he must evaluate independently, not only from governments, but from lobbies, non-governmental organizations and even from other rapporteurs.

¹²⁹ Many experts have endured mobbing, including John Dugard, Jean Ziegler, Idriss Jazairy, Richard Falk, Olivier de Schutter, William Schabas and Michael Lynk. Even Virginia Dandan, long-time Chair of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and Independent Expert on human rights and international solidarity, was ridiculed by an NGO because of her press release on her mission to Cuba (A/HRC/38/40/Add.1).

III. Ecuador

49. In its 2016 concluding observations on the sixth periodic report of Ecuador, the Human Rights Committee welcomed the adoption of the Comprehensive Organic Criminal Code, the Organic Act on National Equality Councils, the Act for the Reparation of Victims and the Prosecution of Grave Human Rights Violations and Crimes against Humanity, the National Plan for Good Living 2013–2017, the Organic Act on Disabilities, the Organic Act on Intercultural Education, the Comprehensive National Plan for the eradication of sexual offences in the education system, and the Plurinational Plan for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and Ethnic and Cultural Exclusion (CCPR/C/ECU/CO/6, para. 3). At the same time, the Committee expressed concern over allegations that judges had been threatened with judicial proceedings in connection with the exercise of their duties, that such proceedings had actually been opened and that the judicial system was used to impose harsh sentences on government critics and members of the opposition in a manner that put its impartiality in doubt (ibid., paras. 25). The Committee also expressed concern over reports that some oil concessions had been granted in indigenous territories without prior consultation with the communities affected (ibid., para. 35).

50. In its 2012 concluding observations on the third periodic report of Ecuador, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights welcomed the ratification by Ecuador of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and commended it upon being the first State to do so. It noted the State party's ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and its Optional Protocol, the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance. The Committee welcomed improvements in the State party's social indicators for human development and poverty reduction, as well as the increases made in budgetary allocations for economic and social expenditure. The Committee highlighted the passage of the 2008 Constitution of Ecuador, which established the direct applicability of the human rights set forth in the Constitution and in international human rights instruments, the principle of non-discrimination in the exercise of human rights and the enforceability of human rights by judicial mechanisms such as constitutional protection actions. The Committee noted the advances made in the development of a legislative framework designed to ensure the enjoyment of the rights set forth in the Covenant, including the Food Sovereignty Act, the Higher Education Act and the Disabilities Act (E/C.12/ECU/CO/3, paras. 3–7).

51. At the same time, the Committee expressed concern about the environmental impacts of mining and agribusiness projects, particularly their effects on people's ability to exercise the right to water, and urged the State party to establish environmental protection measures. The Committee also expressed concern about corporate land purchases and their impact on landownership by campesinos, and about living conditions in high-risk zones. The Committee recommended that the State party develop land titling plans in order to safeguard campesinos' ownership of their land and establish mechanisms for preventing forced sales (ibid., paras. 25–26).

52. During the third cycle of the universal periodic review, the Human Rights Council examined the national report of Ecuador (A/HRC/WG.6/27/ECU/1) on 1 May 2017. The report of the Working Group of the Universal Periodic Review (A/HRC/36/4) reflects the recognition of many States of the achievements of Ecuador, especially in the field of economic, social and cultural rights. Of the 182 recommendations that were made, Ecuador accepted 162 and noted the remaining 20.

53. Those concluding observations and the universal periodic review guided the Independent Expert's mission. Furthermore, he studied the new memorandum of understanding between the United Nations and Ecuador, signed in New York on 22 September 2017, which gives reason for optimism for the exchange of good practices, law enforcement, assistance and international cooperation in criminal matters and in the struggle against corruption.¹³⁰

54. He discussed Ecuadorian initiatives to adopt a United Nations treaty on the social responsibility of transnational corporations,¹³¹ the creation of a United Nations tax body that would coordinate tax policies with a view to phasing out tax competition, tax havens and tax evasion, progress in the adoption of a financial transactions tax, and the support Ecuador gives to the Bolivian initiative on a declaration on the rights of peasants. He also discussed the possible advantages of establishing an independent CELAC human rights court, outside the OAS system, and recalled the optimistic words of then President Rafael Correa at the fourth CELAC summit, held in January 2016:¹³² "Everything is done" to have a CELAC human rights system. "The only thing that prevents this from happening is fear".¹³³ The Independent Expert learned, however, that the creation of a CELAC court is still far off. Meanwhile, the cooperation of CELAC with the European Union, the various joint conferences held and the progress made in advancing human rights and gender equality have generated beneficial results for human rights and the rule of law.¹³⁴ With regard to public health issues, he learned about the efforts of Ecuador to promote breastfeeding.¹³⁵

55. With the Ombudsman, the Independent Expert discussed, among other things, his 2016 report on tax evasion and tax havens (A/71/286) and the historic Ecuadorian tax havens law prohibiting elected officials and other public servants from keeping personal assets, including companies and capital, offshore.¹³⁶ They discussed the problem of secrecy jurisdictions and the 30 billion dollars of Ecuadorian wealth currently offshore. The Independent Expert welcomed the initiative to ban tax havens internationally.¹³⁷ As in many countries in Latin America, Asia, Africa and elsewhere, corruption remains a problem, which the Government of Ecuador is tackling. In this context, the assistance of UNODC in connection with the control of illegal crops¹³⁸ and drug trafficking is welcome.

56. In the domestic field, the Independent Expert discussed the Nacional Development Plan 2017–2021 and efforts to reduce inequalities and promote human rights for all. Progress has been slowed down by the fall in oil prices, which has hindered realization of social promises. Moreover, institutional instabilities remain.¹³⁹

57. Civil society representatives informed the Independent Expert that problems remained with obtaining free, prior and informed consent from indigenous persons in connection with the extracting industry. Contracts have been granted to foreign investors without consulting the affected communities and a large number of persons have been evicted from their homes. Police have arrested indigenous persons who defend their lands, and courts have indicted indigenous people for resisting evictions, a frequent occurrence in many countries. These and other problems were discussed at the United Nations Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development (Habitat III), held in Quito in 2017, with the participation of the Special Rapporteur on adequate housing as a component of the right to an adequate standard of living, and on the right to non-discrimination in this context, Leilani Farha.¹⁴⁰

58. Before and after his mission, the Independent Expert held informative conversations with the Foreign Ministers Guillaume Long and María Fernanda Espinosa and with Ambassador Luis Gallegos.

IV. Conclusions

59. As the first United Nations rapporteur to visit the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela in 21 years,¹⁴¹ and one of the few to have recently visited Ecuador, the Independent Expert is conscious of his responsibilities and limitations. Six years into the mandate, he has learned that governments are not always the “bad guys”. As demonstrated in 13 thematic reports, other players impact on the enjoyment of human rights, including the World Trade Organization, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, transnational corporations and some lobbies like the military-industrial-financial complex. These actors often wield more influence than States. Moreover, the national and international economic orders are distorted by bilateral investment treaties, free trade agreements, credit rating agencies, vulture funds, boycotts and unilateral coercive measures, which have often resulted in the suffering of billions of individuals. Rapporteurs should focus not only on States and their failures, but also on other actors and the pervasive lack of accountability.

60. Democratically elected governments possess legitimacy and only they can effectively protect the human rights of persons under their jurisdiction and implement change. Recognizing that in every government there are good and less good politicians, what is important is to persuade them that it is in their interest to adopt measures that will enhance the enjoyment of human rights.

61. Rapporteurs should conduct country visits with a view to helping rather than condemning. Rapporteurs must strive for objectivity, and rigorously observe the code of conduct, particularly article 6. Whereas some civil society organizations think that the goal is “naming and shaming”, this rarely brings results, because the “namer” is not always perceived as independent or possessing moral authority. When the country being named has reservations about the integrity and objectivity of rapporteurs or of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, OHCHR invitations will not be forthcoming. The incentive for governments is the expectation that rapporteurs will make constructive proposals.

62. The solution to the Venezuelan “crisis” lies in good faith negotiations between the Government and the opposition, an end to the economic war, and the lifting of sanctions. In pursuance of the principle of international solidarity (see A/HRC/35/35), United Nations agencies should provide advisory services and technical assistance to the Government. The Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence may wish to address the interplay between State crime and international order, both from the positive and the natural law perspective, and formulate recommendations concerning reparations due to populations affected by sanctions and economic war. Rich States should facilitate humanitarian assistance in coordination with neutral organizations such as ICRC, the priority being how to effectively help Venezuelans while respecting State sovereignty.

¹⁴¹ The last visit took place in 1996. In its responses of 2005, the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela elucidated how it had implemented the recommendations (see E/CN.4.2006/6/Add.2, paras. 404–466).

63. While the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela is undergoing a severe economic crisis, the Government is not standing idle; it is seeking international assistance to overcome the challenges, diversifying the economy and seeking debt restructuring. Sanctions only aggravate the situation by hindering the imports necessary to produce generic medicines and seeds to increase agricultural production. Sanctions have also led to emigration. The problems of Ecuador partly have to do with the fall in the oil prices. The Government is keenly aware of that and is addressing deficiencies within its possibilities. Again, international solidarity and South-South cooperation will help enhance the human rights of all.

64. The Independent Expert wishes to express his appreciation to the Governments of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and of Ecuador for answering his questions and furnishing extensive documentation and statistics. Civil society organizations contributed pertinent analyses that he considered in his evaluation.

V. Recommendations

65. The Independent Expert recommends that the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela:

(a) Continue efforts at dialogue with opposition parties, revive the negotiations hosted in the Dominican Republic by the former prime minister of Spain, José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero, and promote national reconciliation by releasing detainees and granting commutations of sentence;

(b) Invite other special procedures mandate holders to visit the country, besides the Special Rapporteurs on unilateral coercive measures and on the right to development, who have already been invited. The Special Rapporteurs on food, on health, on adequate housing, on the independence of judges and lawyers, the Independent Expert on foreign debt, the Special Rapporteurs on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention and other experts would offer valuable expertise;

(c) Welcome humanitarian aid offered by governments, the European Union,¹⁴² inter-governmental organizations and the private sector;

(d) Continue constructive cooperation with the United Nations treaty bodies and implement their recommendations;

(e) Continue cooperation with FAO and WHO and ask UNODC for assistance in combating the scourge of food and medicine smuggling by national and international rings;

(f) Strengthen cooperation with ILO, deal expeditiously with contentious cases and implement ILO recommendations, including those related to Case No. 2254, by establishing a social dialogue table and action plan;

(g) Strengthen South-South cooperation, including with the Bolivarian Alliance for the Peoples of Our America, the Union of South American Nations, SELA and CELAC. In particular, strengthen technical and institutional cooperation between SELA and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development for the promotion of sustainable and inclusive economic growth in Latin America, as well as joint actions in the economic, social and trade areas;

¹⁴² www.consilium.europa.eu/en/press/press-releases/2018/04/19/declaration-by-the-high-representative-on-behalf-of-the-eu-on-the-situation-in-venezuela/?utm_source=dsms-auto&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=Declaration%20by%20the%20High%20Representative%20on%20behalf%20of%20the%20EU%20on%20the%20situation%20in%20Venezuela.

(h) Engage proactively with entrepreneurs and a diverse group of non-governmental actors so as to resolve together the prevailing social and political problems.

66. The Independent Expert recommends that the Government of Ecuador:

(a) Expand its cooperation with United Nations agencies;

(b) Strengthen South-South cooperation, including with the Bolivarian Alliance for the Peoples of Our America, the Union of South American Nations, SELA and CELAC, so as to solidify a Latin American model of enforcement of economic, social and cultural rights while advancing civil and political rights;

(c) Continue constructive cooperation with the United Nations treaty bodies, particularly the Human Rights Committee and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and implement their recommendations;

(d) Continue its leadership in the campaign to negotiate and adopt a legally binding treaty on the social responsibility of transnational corporations;

(e) Continue efforts to establish a United Nations tax body to phase out tax havens and criminalize tax evasion;

(f) Continue defending the sovereignty of States against abuses by investors and transnational corporations and oppose any bilateral investment agreement or free trade agreement that includes investor-State dispute settlement arbitrations.

67. The Independent Expert recommends that the General Assembly:

(g) Invoke article 96 of the Charter of the United Nations and refer the following questions to the International Court of Justice: Can unilateral coercive measures be compatible with international law? Can unilateral coercive measures amount to crimes against humanity when a large number of persons perish because of scarcity of food and medicines? What reparations are due to the victims of sanctions? Do sanctions and currency manipulations constitute geopolitical crimes?

(h) Adopt a resolution along the lines of the resolutions on the United States embargo against Cuba, declaring the sanctions against the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela contrary to international law and human rights law;

(i) Create a consolidated central register of unilateral coercive measures likely to have a human rights impact, to be maintained and updated by the Secretary-General, as proposed by the Special Rapporteur on unilateral coercive measures in his 2015 report to the General Assembly (A/70/345) and his 2017 report to the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/36/44).

68. The Independent Expert recommends that the Human Rights Council:

(a) Reaffirm the Code of Conduct for Special Procedures Mandate Holders, particularly paragraphs 3 and 6 concerning their independence and the commitment to evaluate all information in good faith, including submissions by governments;

(b) Defend experts against ad hominem attacks, intimidation and threats.

69. The Independent Expert recommends that the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights proactively support special procedure mandate holders in the exercise of their professional judgment and independence; facilitate consultation with and coordination among the rapporteurs, including through their Coordination Committee of Special Procedures, and ensure that apparent contradictions emanating from different points of view do not send wrong signals; and implement the decisions on coordination adopted at the 2016 meeting of rapporteurs so as to strengthen the coherence and credibility of special procedures.

70. The Independent Expert recommends that the International Criminal Court investigate the problem of unilateral coercive measures that cause death from malnutrition, lack of medicines and medical equipment. The examination should not only be quantitative, but should determine whether, objectively treated, economic war, embargoes, financial blockades and sanctions regimes amount to geopolitical crimes and crimes against humanity under Article 7 of the Rome Statute.

71. The Independent Expert recommends that the meeting of States parties to the Rome Statute continue the normative work on the Rome Statute and recognize geopolitical crimes, including unilateral coercive measures and currency manipulations that induce hyperinflation, as within the scope of Article 7 of the Statute. Normative clarity has significant pedagogical value.

72. The Independent Expert recommends that, until the International Court of Justice and the International Criminal Court address the lethal outcomes of economic wars and sanctions regimes, the Permanent Peoples Tribunal, the Russell Tribunal and the Kuala Lumpur War Crimes Commission undertake the task so as to facilitate future judicial pronouncements.

Letter from José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero to the opposition¹

Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, February 7, 2018

Dear Sir:

After working without rest for two years for a peaceful, democratic coexistence, to overcome the economic and social problems of Venezuela, and with the spirit of reconciliation among all Venezuelans, and after a huge effort of dialogue, sponsored in recent months for the exemplary effort of the President and the Foreign Minister of the Dominican Republic, with the accompaniment of a group of friendly countries, a basic consensus was reached for a great agreement, which represents a real and courageous hope for the future of Venezuela, materialized in a document presented to the parties that responds to the essential proposals discussed during months, namely, the agreement in an electoral process with guarantees and consensus on the date of the elections, the position on the sanctions against Venezuela, the conditions of the Commission of the Truth, the cooperation before the social and economic challenges, the commitment for an institutional normalization and the guarantees for the fulfilment of the agreement, and the commitment for a fully normalized operation and development of democratic politics.

Unexpectedly for me, the document was not signed by the opposition's representation. I am not valuing the circumstances and the reasons, but my duty is to defend the truth and my commitment is not to give up on the achievement of a historic commitment among Venezuelans.

That is why I ask you, thinking of peace and democracy, that your organization formally endorses the agreement that I send you, once the Government has committed to scrupulously respecting what was agreed.

I make this request from my deep conviction in the need of this agreement and from my commitment for its fulfilment.

I await your favourable response;

May you receive a warm greeting,

(Signed) JOSE LUIS RODRIGUEZ ZAPATERO

7 de febrero de 2018

Muy señor mío:

Después de trabajar sin descanso durante dos años por una convivencia pacífica, democrática, de superación de los problemas económicos y sociales de Venezuela, y con el espíritu de reconciliación entre todos los venezolanos, y tras un esfuerzo ingente de diálogo, auspiciado en los últimos meses por el esfuerzo ejemplar del presidente y el canciller de República Dominicana, con el acompañamiento de un grupo de países amigos, se culminó en un consenso básico para un gran acuerdo, que supone una esperanza real y valiente para el futuro de Venezuela, concretado en un documento presentado a las partes que da respuesta a los planteamientos esenciales discutidos durante meses, a saber, el acuerdo en un proceso electoral con garantías y consenso en la fecha de los comicios, la posición sobre las sanciones contra Venezuela, las condiciones de la Comisión de la Verdad, la cooperación ante los desafíos sociales y económicos, el compromiso por una normalización institucional y las garantías para el cumplimiento del acuerdo, y el compromiso para un funcionamiento y desarrollo plenamente normalizado de la política democrática.

De manera inesperada para mi, el documento no fue suscrito por la representación de la oposición. No valoro las circunstancias y los motivos, pero mi deber es defender la verdad y mi compromiso es no dar por perdido el lograr un compromiso histórico entre venezolanos.

Es por ello que le pido, pensando en la paz y la democracia, que su organización suscriba formalmente el acuerdo que le remito, una vez que el gobierno se ha comprometido a respetar escrupulosamente lo acordado. Esta petición la formulo desde mi convicción profunda en la necesidad de este acuerdo y desde mi compromiso por el cumplimiento del mismo.

Espero su respuesta favorable;

Recibas un cordial saludo,

JOSE LUIS RODRIGUEZ ZAPATERO²

Open Letter from Noam Chomsky, Danny Glover and 152 others in support of mediation, not sanctions, in Venezuela

We urge the United States and Canadian governments to immediately remove their illegal¹ sanctions against Venezuela and to support efforts at mediation between the government of Venezuela and the nonviolent segments of the political opposition.

We, the undersigned organizations and individuals in the U.S. and Canada, support hemispheric relations based on respect for the sovereignty of all peoples of the Americas. We are deeply concerned by the use of illegal sanctions, whose effect falls most heavily on the poorest and most marginal sectors of society, to coerce political and economic change in a sister democracy.

Polls in Venezuela show that the large majority of Venezuelans oppose sanctions, regardless of their opinion of the Maduro government. Sanctions merely complicate efforts by the Vatican, Dominican Republic, and other international actors to mediate a resolution to the deep polarization in Venezuela. Moreover, sanctions undermine efforts of the democratically elected government and Constituent Assembly to address critical economic issues and determine their own political destiny.

Despite the high-minded rhetoric of officials in Washington and Ottawa, it is not a genuine concern for democracy, human rights, and social justice that drives the belligerent interventionist posture towards Caracas. From former U.S. president Obama's admittedly untrue presidential decree that Venezuela represents a national security threat to the United States, to UN Ambassador Nikki Haley's declaration that Venezuela is "an increasingly violent narco-state" that threatens the world, the use of hyperbole in diplomatic situations seldom contributes to peaceful solutions on the world stage.

It is no secret that Venezuela, unlike Mexico, Honduras, Colombia, Egypt, or Saudi Arabia, is targeted for regime change by the U.S. precisely because of Venezuela's leadership in resisting U.S. hegemony and the imposition of the neoliberal model in Latin America. And of course, Venezuela holds the largest oil reserves in the world, attracting more unwanted attention from Washington.

The U.S. and Canada tried and failed to use the Organization of American States (OAS) to build a bloc to hypocritically evoke the Democratic Charter against Venezuela. Recently, Luis Almagro, the rogue Secretary General of the OAS, went so far as to publicly support the swearing in of a parallel Supreme Court unconstitutionally appointed by opposition legislators and allowed them to use the OAS headquarters in Washington, D.C. for their ceremony — without the approval of any OAS member state. Almagro has thereby delegitimized the OAS, emboldened the most extreme and violent elements of the Venezuelan opposition, and side-lined efforts at mediation.

The U.S.-Canadian sanctions represent a cynical use of coercive economic power to attack a nation that is already dealing with hyperinflation and shortages of basic commodities. While said to be in the name of advancing democracy and freedom, the sanctions violate the Venezuelan peoples' basic human right to sovereignty, as outlined in the UN and OAS Charters.

We call on the political leaders of the United States and Canada to reject overheated rhetoric and to contribute to the search for real solutions to Venezuela's political and economic problems. We urge the U.S. and Canadian governments to rescind their sanctions and support the mediation efforts pursued by the Chancellor of the Dominican Republic Miguel Vargas, the President of Dominican Republic Danilo Medina, former Spanish Prime Minister José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero, the Vatican, and supported by a growing number of Latin American nations.

Statement from 47 human rights organizations and social movements on the declarations of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on human mobility in Venezuela

On March 13, 2018, the United Nations Refugee Agency (UNHCR) has released guidelines and issued statements for governments to address the situation of people in need of international protection and humanitarian assistance, for “the continued departure of Venezuelans towards neighbouring countries and other countries in the region and the world” according to its statements.

On March 14, 2018, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights issued resolution 2-18, “Forced Migration of Venezuelan People,” in which it urges the member States of the OAS to take certain actions with regard to Venezuelan citizens who are leaving the country.

In view of these measures, the undersigned organizations express we share the concern stated by the UNHCR and the IACHR regarding the situation of Venezuelan nationals, including those who have dual citizenship, who have voluntarily mobilized outside the national territory to reside and develop their life projects in foreign countries. Particularly, because in some countries there have been serious violent incidents of xenophobia and racism against Venezuelans, as well as public policies and discriminatory governmental actions in open violation of their human rights.

However, we disagree with the analysis of the situation carried out by both the UNHCR and the IACHR, because in the studies conducted by the interdisciplinary team of Sures based on the information available in Venezuela from reliable, safe, impartial and scientific sources, concluded that the main cause that motivates the voluntary mobilization of Venezuelans to other countries is the economic situation. The vast majority of people who have mobilized have made that decision voluntarily, without any duress or coercion. In addition, we wish to express our deepest concern that the UNHCR and the IACHR have not expressly referred, or even considered in their evaluation and diagnosis of the Venezuelan reality, the impact generated by coercive diplomacy and, especially, the unilateral sanctions adopted by the government of the United States of America, as well as by other European States, against the economic and social development of our country.

The unilateral commercial and financial sanctions imposed on the Venezuelan State and people constitute one of the main causes of the economic crisis in Venezuela and the violation of the social rights of our majorities. Likewise, they obviously constitute interference in the internal affairs of our country and an open violation of the fundamental principles of Public International Law and the Charter of the United Nations. For these reasons, because both the UNHCR and the IACHR are aware of these unilateral sanctions, it is inexplicable and unjustifiable that they have omitted even mentioning these actions; if they had been congruent with their mandate they had to condemn them in a public and severe manner.

Finally, we wish to reiterate that in Venezuela there is no “humanitarian crisis” under the terms and conditions contemplated in International Public Law and in the International Law of Human Rights. Therefore, the measures to be adopted must not be based on that mistaken interpretation of our realities. There is certainly an economic crisis with a serious impact on the enjoyment of social human rights, as pointed out by the Independent Expert of the United Nations Alfred de Zayas, after an on-site visit to our country, where he points “Venezuela suffers an economic war, a financial blockade, suffers a high level of smuggling and of course needs international solidarity to solve these problems”. For these reasons, we urge the UNHCR and the IACHR

1. To continue its efforts to guarantee the human rights of Venezuelan nationals who have voluntarily mobilized to reside in other countries, within the framework of the right to human mobility, in view of the incidents of discrimination, intolerance, xenophobia and racism attributed to the receiving States and societies.

To publicly denounce and condemn the unilateral coercive sanctions imposed against Venezuela by the government of the United States of America and other European States, which have generated and exacerbated the economic and human rights situation of the Venezuelan people.
